CONFEREES MEET MONDAY TO IRON OUT DIFFERENCES

House Shows Rigid Determination To Prevent Inclusion of Export Debenture in Final Bill.

LITTLE HOPE SEEN FOR CONFERENCE

Senate Will Have Opportunity To Vote Again on Clause Shown To Be Objectionable to Hoover.

BY FRANCIS M. STEPHENSON,
Associated Press Staff W ter.

Washington, May 18.—(AP)—Another roll call in the senate o er the export debenture provision put into its farm bill over the objection of President Hoover appeared tonight to be inevitable with a deadlock in sight between senate and house conferees over the proposition.

The conferees will meet Monday behind closed doors in an attempt to adjust the conflicting views of the senate and house. The debentures section is the main point of contention and a stubborn, long drawn out argument seems certain.

While three of the five senate conferees voted against export debentures, they are bound to support this controverted proposal in conference with house members.

Senator McNary, republican, Oregon, chairman of the conferees, declared today that he felt bound to stand by the export debenture provision in view of the determined contest over this point in the senate and its ultimate decision to put into the bill. House conferees were just as determined today in their stand against the provision and indicated an intention to oppose it to a finish in conference.

Won By Close Vote.

The export debenture plan was put into the farm bill by the senate by a vote of 47 to 44, with democrats lining up almost solidly for it and 13 republican independents joining them. However, the house yesterday voted by majority of 130 to send the senate measure to conference.

Under the rules, the senate will have to act first on the conference report returned by the conferees. There is every indication that some of those who voted for the export debenture in the senate may shift their drive for this principle from the farm measure to the tariff bill, thus permitting the farm legislation to become a law.

This break in the export debenture ranks, if it comes, would end the farm debate within a week or two and the debentures discussion probably would center subsequently on the tariff bill. An even stronger line-up favoring this proposition as a part of the tariff legislati n is seen by its proponents.

Effect Problematical.

How this would affect enactment of the tariff bill into law, especially in view of President Hoover's emphatic opposition to the debentures plan, is problematical.

An adjustment of other differences between the senate and house farm measures is expected early in the approaching negotiations. Senator McNary, the author of the senate bill, and Representative Haugen, republican, Iowa, the author of the house

Half of University Law School Fund Is Pledged Here

Hughes Spalding Chairman of Local Committee Co-operating in Campaign for $100,000.

STATE CHALLENGED BY ATLANTA ALUMNI

Plans Call for Raising Entire Sum for Lamar School of Law by June Commencement.

Barrett To Begin Drive This Week

Judge William H. Barrett, judge of the United States court of the southern district of Georgia, begins this week his campaign for the completion of the University Law School building fund guaranteed two years ago through the University Alumni Association conditional upon the trustee meeting certain demands outlined by the State Bar Association to put the school on a class A basis.

These requirements have been met in full by the trustees and Judge W. H. Barrett, president of the State Alumni Association, at the time the guarantee was made, and directing the movement for the completion of the fund, inaugurates the campaign in Macon on Monday, in Albany on Tuesday, 21, and in Columbus, Wednesday 22. The story of the movement and the progress already made by the Atlanta committee is told below.

A fund of $100,000 pledged by alumni of the University of Georgia for erection of a new building to house the Lamar School of Law will meet with whirlwind success if the remainder of the state follows the pace set by 'tlanta.

Hughes Spalding, chairman of the committee in Atlanta, Saturday announced that the lawyers of Atlanta and the alumni of this city will raise more than half of the entire sum, and that a substanti part of this sum already has been subscribed and is in hand.

Plans call for raising of the entire $100,000 before the university commencement in June, and Mr. Spalding promised Saturday that Atlanta's part of the fund will be in readiness at that time. He challenged the rest of the state to fall into line immediately and match Atlanta's record for supporting the state university and its law school.

The new building—funds for which are being raised under a state-wide committee headed by Judge W. H. Barrett, of the federal district court for the southern district of Georgia—will be named in honor of Harold Hirsch, prominent Atlanta attorney and one of the leading supporters of

NEW ATTACK MADE ON SCHOOL BOARD

Claim That City Has 11,000 More Pupils Than in 1924 Hit by Real Estate Group.

Scoring George W. Powell, president of the Atlanta Board of Education, for a statement that schools are operating on approximately $500,000 less than they had in 1924 and that there are approximately 11,000 more students to teach, a special committee representing the property owners' division of the Atlanta Real Estate Board Saturday released a statement in which figures of the department and the audit of William H. James was cited to combat the contention of the board head.

The board of education also is censured for preparing a budget calling for expenditure of more money than was appropriated for school purposes this year. At the last meeting of the board, the anticipated expenditure exceeded the available funds by between $90,000 and $100,000 and it was hinted that unless additional funds are provided, teachers' salaries will be cut to absorb the excess to prevent running a deficit.

Responsibility Evasion Charged

Charging that the board is "trying to hang on to the council's neck, the responsibility for reducing the teachers' salaries, although money by thousands has been wasted by the school board or under its authority in buying dolls and toy money, jazz records and other things not needed," the committee issued a scathing attack on the increase in certain salaries of administration officials.

The text of the statement follows: "Mr. George W. Powell is quoted in The Atlanta Constitution of the

Bathing Suits Uncensored, Officials Say

Conscience of Swimmers To Be Sole Guide, White Declares.

Young Atlanta will use its own judgment in the type, color, brevity or lack of brevity in bathing apparel to be used this summer in the city's bathing pools.

Councilman John A. White, of the fourth ward and chairman of the parks committee of city council, made this statement Saturday and at the same time announced that Mrs. Chester Johnson, civic club leader, would have charge of the recreation centers to be operated under the department of playgrounds, and that Miss Jewel Lane, swimming instructor at the pools last year, again would teach the youngsters.

"We will not place a single restriction on the bathing suits which are worn. The consciences of Atlantans will be their sole guide," Mr. White declared.

"Atlanta's playgrounds and swimming pools are in the best physical condition in the history of the city and we anticipate the biggest season in the annals of the city.

"The department is fortunate in obtaining the services of Mrs. Johnson, who has wide experience in organization work and who is well qualified for the post. We also feel that no more competent swimming instructor can be obtained to assist the boys and girls of Atlanta in their efforts to learn to swim than Miss Lane."

"The Constitution is to be congratulated on the fine co-operation it has given the department in its purpose to teach every boy and girl in Atlanta to swim during the summer months. Last year scores learned, and many others will be taught this year. Our annual swimming meet will be staged at the close of the season at Piedmont lake."

REPARATION MEET NEARING FINISH

Result of Conference Unsettled as Experts Prepare To Consider New Conditions.

Paris, May 18.—(AP)—The reparations conference approached the end of its labors tonight after 14 weeks spent in debate and study over the problem of German reparations.

Although the experts in general felt that the end was at hand, none of them could be sure what would be the conclusion of so much work.

The experts of the creditor nations today virtually finished their examination and discussion of the conditions to which the Germans subordinate their acceptance of the settlement proposed by Owen D. Young.

On Monday morning the allied and the American experts will meet again to consider certain counter conditions which the creditor countries wish to present to Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, chief of the German delegation.

Meanwhile each delegation will send to the chief German delegate tonight or tomorrow observations concerning the German conditions. These are expected to enlighten him as to their point of view and to give him in advance an idea what would be the allied counter conditions or reservations.

PRINCESS BREAKS ENGAGEMENT WITH PRINCE CHRISTIAN

Bucharest, Rumania, May 18.—(AP) Princess Irene, of Greece, second youngest daughter of the late King Constantine, today, broke her engagement with Prince Christian Schaumburg-Lippe, nephew of King Christian of Denmark.

It is understood that Princess Irene, who is the prettiest member of the Greek royal family, disavowed the engagement because she found that she would be obliged to live almost permanently in the austere atmosphere of German monarchist and military society at Potsdam. Prince Christian lives usually at Potsdam.

Princess Irene is herself of Danish and German origin. She now will have to wait for another marriageable European prince. But the stock of eligible royal bridegrooms is dangerously low.

Friends of Princess Irene think she might be forced to take the hand and heart of a prince who is not of royal blood.

FOUR INJURED AS TORNADO HITS TEXAS VILLAGE

Houston, Texas, May 18.—(AP)—Four persons were hurt, two seriously, when a tornado struck the village of Spring, about 20 miles north of here, this afternoon. The injured were Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Farrow and a Mrs. Benedict and her small daughter. The twister swept a path about a quarter of a mile long and 50 feet wide.

ANTI-WAR GROUP MEETS THIS WEEK

Conference Will Open in Atlanta Thursday—Pan-American Pacts Will Be Discussed.

Relations between the United States and South America will constitute the principal subject of discussion at the conference of the Georgia committee on Cause and Cure of War, to be held here Thursday, May 23.

Announcement of the program was made Saturday by Mrs. Sinclair Jacobs, chairman.

The conference will last but one day, three sessions being set at Eggleston hall on West Peachtree street, near North avenue.

Recent treaties entered into by ex-secretaries Kellogg and Hughes will be debated at length it was stated. Pan-American pacts signed at the recent Havana parley will come in for greatest attention.

Morning Session.

Registration will take place at Eggleston hall at 9 a. m. and the session which opens at 10 a. m. will be given over to business and election of officers. Organizations will report on activities and a program for the ensuing year will be adopted, it was announced.

Luncheon will be served at the Biltmore hotel and a limited number of Atlantans, not members of the committee, will be admitted. John D. Allen, professor of journalism at Mercer, will speak at the luncheon on "Press, Public Opinion and Peace."

The afternoon session will open at 3:15 o'clock when one of the most interesting features of the convention will take place. A round table discussion on disarmament has been arranged.

George Raffalovitch, who is here representing the Rockefeller Foundation and giving lectures at Emory university, will take the part of France in the discussion. Mr. Raffalovitch was born a Frenchman though he is now a citizen of the United States, and has served in the United States army. He has been a newspaper correspondent in foreign countries and just prior to the outbreak of the World War was serving on a special mission for the English government. He is a friend of Mussolini's and is the author of the first biography of the great Italian.

Dr. Newton for Japan.

Dr. J. C. C. Newton, who lived for 35 years in Japan, will represent Japan. Dr. Newton was an Episcopal missionary to Japan.

Dr. Iola Kay Eastburn, of Brenau, long a student of international affairs, will take the part of Germany.

Dr. R. H. McLeau, of Emory, well known throughout the south and a visitor to the League of Nations in Geneva, will represent Great Britain.

James McDonald will assume the role of Italy.

Miss Roberta Hodgson, lecturer and professor, will take the part of the United States.

Alexander Gavrelovchnk of Vladivostok, will speak for Russia.

"Mr. and Mrs. Public Opinion" will be represented by Mrs. Marvin Underwood and R. B. Eleazer.

James G. McDonald, chairman of the board of directors of the Foreign Policy Association and known to radio audiences who have listened to him Monday evenings for some time past, will be the only speaker.

Mr. McDonald has recently had personal interviews with many leading men of foreign countries among whom are numbered Mussolini, Briand, Marsky, Poincare and Venizelos.

A picturesque feature of the evening will be the consuls of Great Britain, Germany, Italy, Cuba and Greece and Atlanta representatives of Belgium, France, Panama and Latzia seated on the stage under their respective flags.

The band of the Georgia Military academy will play the national anthem of each country as the consul or representative is introduced.

EASTERN GELDING BREAKS IN FRONT AND HOLDS LEAD

Naishapur Places by Two Lengths and Panchio Noses Out Favorite Blue Larkspur To Show.

TIME IS 2:10 4-5 ON HEAVY TRACK

80,000 See Tiniest Entry Throw Mud on Heavy-Played Favorites; Winner Pays 3 to 1.

BY ED DANFORTH.
(Constitution Sports Editor.)

Louisville, Ky., May 18.—(Special.) Skipping around a rain-swept soupy race track like a rabbit, Clyde Van Dusen, son of Man O' War, made every post a winning quarter-milestone today and captured the fifty-fifth Kentucky Derby. The tiny chestnut gelding, that runs with short, hopping strides, kicked a geyser of carmel spray back into the faces of Naishapur, Panchio and Blue Larkspur as the four of them splashed their way down to the wire.

Blue Larkspur, the pride of Kentucky, and the public choice, struggled into fourth place. The slippery going that was pie for Clyde Van Dusen was a nauseating dose for Colonel E. R. Bradley's ace. Back of them rushed the unruly mob of disappointments, a strung-out, washed-out clay bespattered band of horses that two minutes before had been potentially the greatest three-year-olds in America. All of them will claim the pelting rain and the flying gumbo as an alibi—all but little Clyde, who ran with the wings of a field lark in his heels and brought his jockey home with clean silks.

Crowd Roots.

As Clyde tow-roped the gallant Naishapur, the surprising Panchio and the disappointing Blue Larkspur down the water-logged stretch, a throng of 75,000 roared. They roared for Clyde to keep coming and for Blue Larkspur to come on. The Bradley colt was the favorite but the Gardner gelding held the faith and fortunes of almost as many.

The horses straggled back to the judges stand after being pulled up Blue Larkspur and Clyde were last to report. Mack Garner, unrecognizable in his coating of mud, saluted, dismounted at a distance and walked in to the weighing box. He had his soaked riding gear trailing from his arm. As Linus McAtee rode the prancing Clyde into the circle of photographers in front of the judges' stand, a mighty cheer was lifted. Linus' silks were wet only from rain, no mud was spattered on him, his face was clean and shiny. Linus and Clyde had been in front all the way

FLOOD CONTROL PLAN OF JADWIN ATTACKED

Senator Hawes Charges Board Selecting Scheme Was "Packed."

Washington, May 18.—(United News.)—The plan of General Jadwin, chief of army engineers for Mississippi river flood control, was vigorously attacked tonight by Senator Hawes, democrat, Missouri, in a statement charging the board which selected this plan over the Mississippi river commission plan was "packed."

"The government will find itself in litigation, the flood control program will be jeopardized, and the whole future and safety of the alluvial valley again placed in jeopardy, if the plan is carried out," Hawes said.

"The president of the United States can, and I believe will, ask a suspension of the work of the army engineer until it can be rectified by executive direction or until congress may, in this special session, take suitable and protective action," he said.

Hawes declared the situation of immediate concern is in Missouri. "I have been reliably informed," he said, "that when the chief of army engineers proceeds with his plan of awarding contracts for construction of a set back levee from Bird's Point to New Madrid, Mo., residents of that area, unable to protect themselves otherwise, will very properly resort to court injunction."

Carrying out the plan of this section, Hawes said, would destroy an area of 135,000 acres of land worth between $12,000,000 and $15,000,000, in which 2,500 people have their homes.

"Bureaucracy is running wild," the Missouri senator said. "Both common justice and humane considerations are to be put aside to gratify the pride of personal opinion.

"Land and property owners in southeast Missouri are to be despoiled in clear violation of the intent of congress, and, if not interrupted, a precedent may be established which will affect the welfare of the whole valley from Cape Girardeau to the Gulf."

Hawes said the entire Missouri delegation had protested to the president.

The board set up to reconcile the differences between the Jadwin and the Mississippi river commission plans was packed, Hawes said, and considered only the Jadwin plan, because the civilian engineer and the head of the Mississippi river commission were selected by General Jadwin.

FUNDS SUBSCRIBED FOR NEW LAW SCHOOL

Heads Alumni Association.

Mr. Hirsch is now president of the Alumni Association of the University. He has been a most loyal alumnus, and has given freely of his time and money to every activity connected with the university. He is a member of the board of trustees of the university, by virtue of being president of the Alumni Association; is general counsel for the Coca-Cola Company, a director in the Atlanta & Lowry National Bank and Trust Company of Georgia, and is one of the leading citizens of the state, known everywhere for his generosity, especially to education.

Campaign plans are actively under way throughout the state to raise the fund for the new law school building, committees having been named by Judge Barrett in towns and cities throughout Georgia. The movement was launched by the alumni association of the university, then headed by Judge Barrett, at the commencement in Athens in 1927. The association pledged a fund of $75,000 to trustees of the university for erection of the new law building provided the university authorities would raise the standards of the Lamar School of Law in such a way as to make it a Class A law school and place it on a parity with law schools of other leading universities.

For the past year the Lamar School of Law has been operating as a Class A institution, the trustees having carried out their part of the agreement. As a result, the alumni are now taking steps to supply the fund they pledged together with an additional $25,000, bringing the entire sum to $100,000.

Response Expected.

Mr. Spalding's statement of Saturday to the effect that Atlanta alumni will subscribe more than half of the entire fund will be greeted with enthusiastic approval by Georgia alumni everywhere and is expected to bring an immediate response from all other parts of the state in the fund campaign.

The statewide committee, of which Judge Barrett is chairman, is composed of the following members:

Judge Samuel H. Sibley, Atlanta; T. M. Cunningham, Jr., Savannah; H. C. Hatcher, Waynesboro; Frank M. Scarlett, Brunswick; German H. Swift, Columbus; E. Kontz Bennett, Waycross; Sam Brown Lippitt, Albany; Edgar B. Dunlap, Gainesville; A. Pratt Adams, Savannah; Roy V. Harris, Louisville; Wellborn Cody, Atlanta; Albert S. Camp, Newnan; William H. Barrett, Augusta, chairman; I. J. Hofmayer, Albany; Robert B. Troutman, Atlanta; Charles J. Bloch, Macon; Frank D. Foley, Columbus; G. Ed Maddox, Rome; R. B. Russell, Jr., Winder; Ted Rosser, LaFayette; Frank P. McIntyre, Savannah; P. F. Brock, Macon; Blanton Portson, Athens; Hatton Lovejoy, LaGrange; E. Warren Moise, Athens; T. P. Pottle, Milledgeville; James W. Talbert, Augusta, secretary.

The Atlanta committee, which has charge of collection of funds in Atlanta and Fulton county, is composed of the following members:

Hughes Spalding, chairman; Harrison Jones, Sanders McDaniel, Cam D. Dorsey, John A. Sibley, Robert B. Troutman, Marion Smith, Warren Moise, Daniel McDougald, Frank Carter, Robert S. Parker, Leonard Haas, E. E. Pomeroy, Alex Smith, Grover Middlebrooks, W. H. Sibley.

Receiving of Subscriptions.

Any of the members of the statewide committee, or any of the local committee, will be glad to receive subscriptions from any friend of the university who wishes to subscribe in any amount to this cause.

The University of Georgia was the first state university organized in the United States. The law school is named for Joseph Henry Lumpkin, its first teacher, and the first chief justice of the supreme court of the state.

"The alumni of the University of Georgia formed a permanent committee for the purpose of reorganizing the law school and for equipping it," a statement of Judge Barrett set forth Saturday. "The alumni pledged themselves and the friends of the university to provide an adequate law building which will be erected on the campus of the university.

"It is the ambition of the committee to be able to report to the alumni society and to the trustees at the university commencement in June that sufficient funds have been subscribed to erect the law building on the campus and to properly equip it. The bench and bar of the state are deeply interested in the success of the enterprise, as it will provide the university with a Class 'A' law school.

"The alumni have started a movement to compliment Harold Hirsch and to show their appreciation of him by having the new law building at the university named in his honor, and subscriptions are being readily secured to bring this enterprise to an early and successful termination. It is the belief of the alumni committee in charge of the work that they can report to the society in June that a sufficient amount has been raised to have the building operations start this summer."

NEW ATTACK MADE ON SCHOOL BOARD

15th of this month as having said at a meeting of the board of education of which he is president, that there were 11,000 fewer students in the schools in 1924 than there are now, and that $500,000 more money was appropriated "for school operation" in 1924 than this year. We think Mr. Powell decidedly in error as to the $500,000, and that as to the 11,000 increase in students his statement is wholly unsupported by the facts.

Daily Attendance Figures.

"According to William H. James & Co., accountants, employed by the citizens committee, appointed to take charge of the school board when a short time ago it was virtually in bankruptcy, the average daily attendance in the schools for the year 1923 to 1928, inclusive, was as follows:

| 1924 | 45,323 |
| 1925 | 43,082 |
| 1926 | 43,964 |
| 1927 | 45,334 |

"There is no possible way to see an increase of 11,000 from 1924 to 1928 in these figures, and "Our Schools" only "estimates" the attendance in 1929 at 46,000.

"We have another fairly accurate line on Mr. Powell's 11,000 increase in pupils from 1924 to 1929. Under the law, the board of education takes a census of the school population each five years and it took such a census in 1923 and another in 1928. The board probably acted in taking these censuses through the superintendent or one of the assistant superintendents or one of the directors or some of the secretaries or some other official chosen for accuracy and reliability, because the amount of money appropriated to the state school fund depends upon the school population. The greater the school population, the greater the sum of money obtained for the schools from the state fund. We may, therefore, assume that the school board, or its representative made every effort to get all the children of school age in its census for both these years.

1923-1928 Increase.

"What was the increase from 1923 to 1928? In the school population the total increase, according to the school board census was as follows:

|---|---|
| White increase | 2,463 |
| Colored increase | 4,663 |
| Total increase | 7,126 |

"The 1928 census was taken last summer. So if Mr. Powell's statement is correct that there has been an increase of 11,000 in the students in the public schools since 1924, then the students in the schools increased 4,000 more than the total increase in the school population from 1923 to 1928. To get every member of the school population in the schools would be a miracle and, of course, is never done, but to get every one and 4,000 more is quite marvelous.

"But this problem might not be so difficult as it seems for Mr. Powell if he is permitted to count enrollment each year, and if he is not confined to the average number of pupils in daily attendance for, according to the public school 'enrollment' records, they had for the year 1928 a total 'enrollment' of white pupils of 4,000 more than the white school population for that year; that is, the claimed 'enrollment' of white pupils for the year ending in June, 1928, according to the records in the office of the director of the census and attendance was 40,873, whereas the total white school population, as shown by the school board census taken in the summer of 1928, was only 36,879. If they had in the schools 40,873 white students, then they had at least 4,000 that did not come from the white school population. This excess could not be accounted for by the non-resident pupils, because the non-resident pupils would amount to only 300 or 400.

Daily Enrollment.

"But there have never been 40,873 white students in the schoolrooms for any single day, although the 'enrollment,' according to the census department, contains that many names.

"And the greatest number of students in the school rooms on any day in the history of the schools will fall far short of 60,000 by thousands, although "Our Schools" in the last issue "estimates" that the "enrollment" for 1929 will be 62,000 and gives the actual "enrollment" for 1928 as 60,176.

"The number of pupils taught in the schools on the days of the greatest attendance in any given year in the past will fall far short of the "enrollment" shown by the school records for that year.

"There is no reason for Mr. Powell, the school board or anyone else to be deceived along this line, for the school superintendent, if he had been present when Mr. Powell made the statement attributed to him by The Atlanta Constitution, would have told him, if asked, that the 'enrollment' for any year exceeds always by a large number the students actually taught in the schools for that year, and that 11,000 more 'students' are not being taught in the year 1929 than were taught in 1924. If the superintendent denies this, we will endeavor to prove it by his own records.

"Our Schools" Hit.

"And yet, 'Our Schools' sets forth in black type in the last issue that 'for the training of 62,000 pupils, $2,834,621.50 has been provided, $432,552.09 less than the 1929 outlay for 56,254 students,' yet the sum for 'training' the pupils in the year 1929 is not $432,552.09 less than the outlay furnished for 'training' the pupils in the public schools for the year 1926, and the schools didn't 'train' 56,254 pupils any day in 1926, and has not and will not 'train' 62,000 any day in the year 1929 soon to close.

"Furthermore, unless the school population increases much faster than the increase from 1923 to 1928, the schools will not 'train' 60,000 any day for 10 years to come, unless, by reason of some new fad more old ladies and old gentlemen and more babies are dragged into the schools than the present 'curricula" attract.

"Now the school board is trying to hang onto the council's neck the responsibility for reducing the teachers' salaries, although money by thousands has been wasted by the school board or under its authority, in buying dolls and toy money, jazz records and other things not needed. Although the school board knew practically the sum of money it would have with which to run the schools this year, and that it might have to cut the teachers' salaries, it found no difficulty in increasing the salaries of the assistant school superintendents in the beginning of the year, $500 each. It has apparently been proceeding on the notion that if at the proper time it screamed loud enough that the teachers' salaries are about to be reduced, it could force council to give it more money.

"The above census figures will probably surprise many, because they show the colored increase was nearly twice as much as the white increase. The total white population of the city is a little more than twice the total colored population, and, yet, the public school census shows that the colored population increased from 1923 to 1928 nearly twice as much as the white school population.

"Each individual will have to reconcile these extraordinary features of the school board census as best he can."

PROHIBITION AGENT SEEKS STUDENTS AS DRY LAW SPIES

Providence, R. I., May 18.—(AP)—By becoming an "undercover" agent getting evidence of ownership of prohibited alcoholic beverages, any student of Brown university accepting the offer will be paid $5 a day, Deputy Prohibition Administrator John W. Morrill in this city announced today.

President W. H. P. Faunce, of Brown, when informed of the offer, said: "I should prefer to see the students here engage in other and more uplifting callings in obtaining money for their college expenses."

measure, already have talked over some of the differences.

The house bill provides for a farm board of six members and the senate bill calls for one of twelve. A compromise on nine members had been predicted.

The house bill would give the president the power to fix the salary of the chairman of the board but the senate modified this to fix the salary at $12,500, the same as for other members of the board.

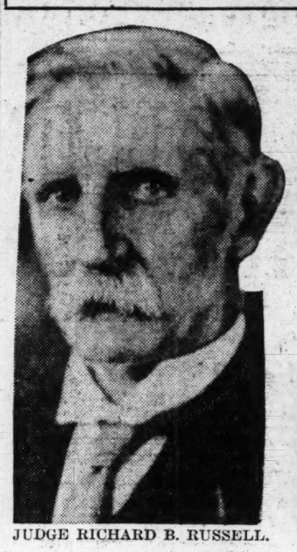

There have been reports at the capitol that Mr. Hoover does not prefer to have the power to fix the salary and a compromise is believed in prospect which will have congress name the salary at $15,000.

The senate farm bill also gave greater power to the proposed stabilization corporations and senate conferees are confident of retaining this section in the measure.

Little hope of an agreement by the conference committee within a week is being held out. If no agreement is reached on the export provision, a disagreement may be reported to the senate.

A determination exists on the part of many senators to attempt to force the house to vote directly on the debenture proposal but the parliamentary situation does not appear to permit such action.

To Be Honored by Oglethorpe Today

JUDGE RICHARD B. RUSSELL.

REV. LOUIE D. NEWTON.

DR. R. H. STAFFORD.

MARK BURROWS.

RUDOLF S. HECHT.

Judge Watkins Is Honored By Dinner at Oglethorpe

In appreciation of the long and constructive service of Judge Edgar Watkins in behalf of Oglethorpe university, Dr. Thornwell Jacobs entertained Saturday evening at a dinner in the dining room at the university. Several hundred guests assembled to honor Judge Watkins, who is completing ten years of service for the university.

Coreopsis and other yellow blossoms adorned the long tables, gold and black being Oglethorpe's colors. The table at which the guests of honor were seated was particularly attractive, a great basket of coreopsis filling the center, with smaller baskets of yellow blossoms at either end. Black and gold bunting and college pennants around the walls completed the decorations of the dining room.

Seated at the honor table were: Dr. Jacobs, Dr. Russell Henry Stafford, pastor of the Old South church, Boston; Nathan Haskell Dole, a prominent critic; Chief Justice R. B. Russell, of the supreme court of Georgia, who is also president of the board of directors of the University of Georgia; Mark Burroughs, head of the department of secretarial preparation at Oglethorpe; Mrs. J. M. High, who receives the degree of doctor of letters at the commencement exercises Sunday night, and Miss Theda Kenyon, one of the distinguished out-of-town guests for commencement; Mrs. E. Rivers, president of the woman's board of Oglethorpe; Mrs. R. B. Russell, Judge Edgar Watkins and Mrs. Watkins.

Dr. Jacobs introduced Mrs. High first, telling of her splendid gift of the High Museum of Art to Atlanta and the state of Georgia.

Next Dr. Jacobs presented Mark Burroughs, characterizing him as one of the finest teachers in Georgia.

Chief Justice Russell was next introduced. Justice Russell spoke of Oglethorpe's phenomenal growth and expressed his appreciation of the honor conferred on him by the university in selecting him as one of those to receive a degree this year. Oglethorpe's growth has been a miracle, said Justice Russell. He referred to the old Oglethorpe and the splendid men who went forth from that institution and mentioned that his father had been one of the students of the old institution, which "gave its life" during the sixties because of its country's needs.

In introducing Mr. Dole, Dr. Jacobs said: "He is one of the most eminent critics, one of the finest poets, one of the most scholarly men that New England has produced."

Mr. Dole said that it was only by accident that he was not a Virginian or a Georgian; merely a matter of luck that the Puritan Fathers settled in Massachusetts. Thereby, said Mr. Dole, humorously, depriving Georgia and Virginia of untold advantages in development.

His talk was built around the idea of the importance of small things in life, to illustrate which he told, in a very interesting manner, of the development of "most of the cultural assets of Massachusetts" from one little magazine. This magazine was started by Phineas P. Adams and left in its last gasp to the rescusitating genius of William Emerson, the father of Ralph Waldo Emerson. He told of the many splendid things originated by Mr. Emerson in a small way that have now become great, and ended by stating that the little forsaken magazine of Phineas P. Adams had now become the Atlantic Monthly. In conclusion, he said: "Now think what you have in Oglethorpe university."

Dr. Jacobs then introduced Miss Theda Kenyon, of New York, whose poems have been acclaimed in America and Europe. Miss Kenyon, at Dr. Jacobs' request, gave a reading from her poem, "Jezebel."

Mrs. Rivers, president of the woman's board, was then presented. She welcomed the guests of honor in the name of the woman's board and called attention to the fact that Mrs. J. M. High is a member of the woman's board.

Mrs. Edgar Watkins was introduced also by Dr. Jacobs.

In introducing Dr. Russell Henry Stafford, Dr. Jacobs stated that Dr. Stafford was pastor of the third oldest church in Boston, the Old South church, founded in 1669. Dr. Stafford spoke very briefly, declaring that he was reserving his speech until Sunday evening.

Judge Watkins was presented next, Dr. Jacobs telling of his many constructive deeds that have assisted Oglethorpe in its growth. He paid high tribute to Judge Watkins, concluding his introduction by saying that Judge Watkins' greatest gift as president of Oglethorpe's board of directors is that he is "university-minded." Dr. Jacobs presented to Judge and Mrs. Watkins a very handsome silver pitcher and ten handsome silver goblets, engraved with the arms of Oglethorpe and suitably inscribed.

Judge Watkins in responding said: "I don't deserve this but I am mighty glad to get it. I accept it because I know that Dr. Jacobs, at least, believes what he has said. I hope that others will exercise a little faith and perhaps they can swallow it all."

Judge Watkins said that he was looking forward one hundred and fifty years when a descendant of Justice Russell would be telling the history of what Thornwell Jacobs had achieved. "It will make the achievements of William Emerson look like thirty cents," he said, laughingly. He gave a resume of the intensive work of Dr. Jacobs in building the university and dwelt on the spirit of Oglethorpe university—"freedom to think, freedom to search with an open mind."

He discussed also the larger educational freedom of the future with truth as its high objective. "There is to be no hampering of the search for truth," said Judge Watkins, "and the Oglethorpe of the future, in all its greatness, will be but the 'lengthened shadow' of Thornwell Jacobs."

At the close of his talk the students gave the university cheer for Judge Watkins.

After the dinner the Oglethorpe Glee Club and the Oglethorpe orchestra gave a very enjoyable program in Lupton auditorium.

FREAK CYCLONE HITS LUMBER MILL AT SAVANNAH

Savannah, Ga., May 18.—(AP)—A cyclone swept down on the Godley-Green Lumber Company plant on the Telfair road five miles from Savannah Friday afternoon, unroofing and twisting several houses. No one was hurt.

The cyclone, intense in force, struck only a small area, officials of the firm reported here today. While the sawmill was in operation the wind lifted the roof and blew down smokestacks. So quickly did the cyclone pass over the plant that even while the roof was being dislodged and dumped in a neighboring field the plant machinery did not stop. Damage to the plant was considerable. A couple of small houses near by were twisted around. Hail fell and corn in the fields near by was uprooted.

So far as can be ascertained, the cyclone did not harm other sections of the county.

ACTRESS, HUSBAND QUIZZED IN PROBE OF HARVARD DEATH

Greenfield, Mass., May 18.—(AP)—Dorothy G. Fullerton, former Broadway show girl, and her wealthy New York clubman husband, Hugh Fullerton, were questioned here by Edward Hickey, county detective, of Hartford, Conn., who is investigating the death of Walter Treadway Huntington, Harvard student.

FAMOUS AIR PILOT MONTGOMERY'S GUEST

Montgomery, Ala., May 18.—(AP)—Captain Ira Eaker, noted army flyer, was the guest of Maxwell field officers tonight.

Captain Eaker, flying a government plane and accompanied by a New York newspaperman, arrived at the local field late today en route from Washington to Tulsa, Okla. He plans to hop off for Dallas, Texas, tomorrow night.

Broken Divorce.

Reno, Nev., May 18.—(AP)—Mrs. Anne Clare Brokaw filed suit in the district court today against George T. Brokaw, New York millionaire, asking for a divorce on grounds of mental cruelty. The complaint in the case was sealed. It is understood a property settlement has been effected out of court. There is a daughter 5 years of age.

GOVERNMENT CONTROL RADIO, PHONES URGED

Communications All Under U. S. Management Called Economic Necessity.

Washington, May 18.—(AP)—Consolidation of radio, telephone and telegraph companies into communications companies regulated by the government was proposed as an economic necessity today by Major General George S. Gibbs, chief signal officer of the army, in testimony before the senate interstate commerce committee.

He declared that the present law, which forbids radio communications to own telephone and telegraph stock, was "unfortunate and reactionary."

The committee is considering a bill to set up a federal communications commission to regulate radio, telegraph, telephones and cables in interstate commerce.

"The method of the present law is all wrong," Gibbs said, adding that the "time will come when all communications will be carried on by companies formed to operate by wireless as well as by wire." He asserted that "erection of artificial barriers between radio and wire companies makes for inefficiency."

The army, he said, which controls all communications in Alaska, "would not have done so well if it had had to contend with such barriers."

TROUBLE CONTINUES IN MILL STRIKE ZONE

Elizabethton, Tenn., May 18.—(AP)—Eight striking union textile workers tonight were free under bond, pending grand jury action, while others who faced preliminary hearing before two magistrates on charges of conspiracy to commit murder were released.

The state charged the eight held were ringleaders in the disturbance that precipitated a near riot on the road at Valley Forge and are the ones Attorney-General Ben Allen said the state was interested in prosecuting.

The others it was announced would be released as most of them were unidentified, at least 75 having refused to give their names when arrested, but their status tonight still was more or less a question that neither the defense nor the court explained.

In serving the warrants on the strikers after the arrest, many were made out against "John Doe" or "Mary Doe." One warrant named a "Red Head Boy," another just "A Boy" while many were served on "one hundred percenters" and "whoopee."

Adjutant General W. C. Boyd, directing the national guard, today waived a preliminary hearing on charges to "aiding and abetting an attempt to commit murder" preferred by Evelyn Heaton yesterday. He was held to the grand jury under bond. The girl charged he ordered a bus driver to charge a group of pickets who were blocking the road and that she was injured. Four other pickets were injured. No hearing has been set for Joe Calhoun, driver of the bus, who was arrested yesterday on charges of attempting to commit murder.

Explosions continued sporadically in widely separated sections today, but no damage was done and national guard officers declared they were set to harass the military patrols. Explosions of giant fire crackers throughout last night kept patrols busy chasing down rumors of homes being destroyed in Carter and other near-by sections where strikers and non-union workers live.

Union forces held a mass meeting immediately after the trial. Some one shouted "let's go get them out," referring to the eight strikers held. The cry spread, but W. E. Kelley, vice president of the United Textile Workers, quieted the union workers with a plea for peace.

Tonight Kelley issued a statement saying he feared some of the strikers "will get beyond our control if we continue to be persecuted." Military leaders also announced that "trouble" was imminent.

Patrols of guardsmen worked their way through the tall mountains which shelter the Valley Forge clan of strikers and ordered all loiterers to move on. There were few lights in the mountains tonight.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL NO TO DEFEND.

Nashville, Tenn., May 18.—(AP)—Attorney-General L. D. Smith, of Tennessee, said Saturday night that he would not go to Elizabethton Sunday to defend Adjutant-General W. C. Boyd on the charge of attempt to commit murder. The statement was in reply to a dispatch from Elizabethton that he was expected there tomorrow.

He has already dispatched both Captain Tom Henderson, judge advocate of the state, and John Neely, state attorney-general's field attorney, to Elizabethton to survey the strike situation and to make recommendations relative to the legality of martial law which has been requested by Sheriff J. M. Moreland, of Carter county, and does not consider his personal appearance in the strike area necessary since these two members of the state's legal department are there.

Governor Henry H. Horton has made no orders relative to troops Saturday, he said tonight, with reference to a report that three more companies of guardsmen had been ordered to stand by.

SEVEN INJURED AS AMBULANCE CRASHES INTO CAR

Upton, Ky., May 18.—(AP)—Seven persons were injured, two probably fatally, when an aubulance of Dixon & Atwood, of Elizabethtown, crashed into a roadster containing five college students at 10:30 o'clock this morning on the Dixie highway, 14 miles south of Elizabethtown.

Ray Marsh, 23 years old, Pensacola, Fla., suffering from a fractured skull and crushed face, and Herrin Northcutt, 20, of Salem, Ark., suffering from an injured chest, were placed in an ambulance and started for St. Joseph's infirmary at Louisville.

The others, who were slightly cut and bruised, are Jess Atwood, 44, of Elizabethtown; Logan Dixon, 30, of Elizabethtown; John. Seebach, 23, of Carlisle, Ky.; William Buckowy, 20, of New York, and Fran Baskin, 23, of San Antonio, Texas.

Dixon and Atwood were in the ambulance, going south on the highway, where they crashed into the roadster occupied by the students of Cumberland College, Tenn., who were en route to Louisville to see the Kentucky Derby. The ambulance had passed around a truck when the accident occurred.

xA section was run to New Orleans Saturday and departed from Candler Field at 10:10 a. m.

The usual Sabbath festivities will take place at Candler Field today, unless the dire prediction of our estimable weather seer comes to pass. Today, in addition to the casual flying about, which is always interesting, there probably will be a parachute jump, either by Jesse Exum or by Miss Reo Flock, Atlanta girl, who made a well-placed leap several Sunday afternoons ago. The big crowds that have flocked to the airport on week-ends have attested to the growing interest in aeronautic activities here and the throngs seem to be increasing each week.

The Atlanta chapter of the National Aeronautical Association will hold its weekly meeting in the civic room of the Ansley hotel at 12:30 o'clock Monday afternoon, it was announced Saturday. The primary object of the meeting, according to Captain Stanford E. Moses, chairman of the membership committee, is "to increase the membership and effectiveness of the National Aeronautical Association as an aid to Atlanta in all phases of aviation and to discuss airports, air transportation, aviation education, air commerce and business, the aircraft industry, air law, air insurance and other subjects."

It has been specifically pointed out by officials of the local chapter that it is not necessary to own a plane or to be a pilot to become affiliated with the Atlanta N. A. A. group, and all persons who are in any way interested in aviation or any of its branches are urged to attend the Monday meeting and, if possible, to sign along the dotted line on a membership card. Invitations have been sent out to more than 200 persons from a list compiled by Capt. Moses, who expects a large percentage of this number to be on hand.

Possibility of the inauguration of night airmail service between Atlanta and Miami within the next eight months loomed Saturday, following a flight Friday night from Miami to Jacksonville by James G. Ray, operations manager for Pitcairn, Inc., and W. S. Kenyon, airways extension superintendent of the department of commerce. The flight was for the purpose of surveying the route to determine the most advantageous points for locating beacon lights and the feasibility of opening night airmail service, which would be of great benefit, in that planes now leave Miami at 11:05 a. m. (eastern time) with less than half a day's mail. A. P. Kerr, Florida manager for Pitcairn, stated Saturday that he hoped to be able to start night service over the route some time next winter and that a new day service probably would be inaugurated also, if the volume of business justified a double schedule.

Two enterprising Georgia towns, in accordance with requests voiced by the United States postoffice department and several aeronautic organizations, henceforth will be known to aviators through the medium of large, white signs atop prominent buildings. At Cartersville, Postmaster H. P. Womelsdorf has obtained permission from the N. C. & S. L. railroad to emblazon "Cartersville" on the roof of the local depot, the sign to run the entire length of the building and the letters to be 12 feet high. An arrow will point north. Lavonia recently had a huge sign painted on the high school building and in this instance the letters are 15 feet and 8 feet across.

Air mail planes during April carried a daily average of 17,024 pounds of letters, and during the month flew more than 1,000,000 miles, half of them at night, according to figures compiled by the American Air Transport Association. The daily average is the greatest ever obtained by the air mail service with the exception of December, 1928, which had the benefit of large Christmas mailings. The total of 523,414 pounds marks the third time that planes have carried more than half a million pounds during a single month.

Employment of televox for automatically turning on airport flood lights, allowing a plane to land with safety at night, recently has been tested successfully. With the Newark, N. J., airport as the scene of operations, a plane approached the field in complete darkness. The pilot turned on a shrill siren which was heard above the roar of the motor, the televox device picking up the sound waves, which automatically illuminated the field.

Petting From Scientific View Subject of Questions

BOOK, "THE SEX LIFE OF YOUTH," ISSUED BY Y. M. C. A.

Chicago, May 18.—(United News.) This is all about petting and it comes from the Y. M. C. A.

In the interests of helping youths with their love problems, the "Y" sent Harry Bone and Grace Elliott to a number of summer conferences where they encountered a widespread questioning for knowledge on this subject.

They talked to the boys and girls, in attendance and then collaborated on a book, "The Sex Life of Youth," which has just been brought out by the Y. M. C. A.

Although they admit there is still much to be written on the subject of love among the young, Bone and Miss Elliott present their treatise as strictly scientific. They say they have gone at the thing from the comradely rather than the pedagogical approach, with no assumption of conclusiveness.

For the purpose of allowing the earnest young man or woman to decide the proper conduct in love, the authors submit the following seven questions about petting, leaving the answers to the youths themselves.

1.—How far is petting a matter of gratification, without any particular respect for the person concerned and how far is it a natural expression of an understanding which has grown up in the realm of the spirit and which has become something rarely beautiful and respected?

2.—What sort of effect is left in the mind as one looks back on the experience?

3.—Is the relationship honestly shared by both, without deception and pretense?

4.—Is petting so light and temporary that it could hardly be habit-forming, or is it intense and prolonged and oft-repeated?

5.—Is the petting likely to be lead to a loss of rational controls and to an indulgence which one or both will later regret?

6.—What is the social status of the person who pets, or the one who refuses to pet?

7.—What other type of enjoyment is petting preventing?

KNIFE IN HAND HIT BY HAMMER; WOMAN IS CUT

Mrs. S. W. Curbow, of 562 Cooper street, was treated at Grady hospital Saturday night for injuries received in an altercation with three other persons at the apartment house in which she lives.

According to information given Call Officers Hill and Duncan, Mrs. Curbow had a knife in her hand and when someone threw a hammer at her husband, who was standing near-by, it struck the knife, causing it to sever an artery in her hand. Her husband applied a tourniquet and took her to the hospital, where it was stated that she was weakened from loss of blood.

W. L. Robinson, Sr., and W. L. Robinson, Jr., both alleged to have been implicated in the altercation, were arrested on charges of drunk and disorderly conduct.

BEEF SIRE SALE, SHOW TUESDAY AT MOULTRIE

More Than 200 Bulls To Be Sold to Farmers at Reduced Prices.

Moultrie, Ga., May 18.—(Special.) Railroads are offering special round-trip rates from points in four southeastern states for what is expected to be the largest show and sale of pure-bred beef type sires ever held in the southeast, at Moultrie, Tuesday, May 21.

More than 200 pure-bred beef type bulls, each animal with a pedigree, will be shown and offered for sale at prices 25 per cent under the regular prices at the breeding farms, and Swift & Company, at Moultrie, have offered to trade in at this sale all scrub animals offered at a premium, according to announcement made here by officials of the A., B. & C. railroad who are co-operating in the movement to improve the type of beef cattle in the territory of the road. The "bull train" operated by the railroad last year was in the interest of dairy cattle.

The show and sale at Moultrie will be held under the auspices of the Moultrie Chamber of Commerce, American Southern Breeders Association, American Aberdeen Angus Breeders Association and the Hereford Breeders Association, with Swift & Company, agricultural institutions and officials, vocational schools and railroads in the states of Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina and Florida, the United States department of agriculture and the Georgia Association co-operating.

An invitation has been extended to the secretary of agriculture of the United States, Arthur M. Hyde, former governor of Missouri, and himself a practical farmer and live stock man, to be present and address the Moultrie gathering.

QUITMAN FARMERS TO ATTEND SALE.

Quitman, Ga., May 18.—(Special.) It is expected that many Brooks county farmers will attend the sale of pure-bred beef and dairy sires in Moultrie Tuesday. A meeting of farmers and businessmen was held here to discuss the plan of clubs of farmers in given districts joining in to buy bulls in a co-operative way. This is a new idea, but it is believed it will prove entirely practical and will enable the farmers in the groups to have the services of the animal at a small cost when individual farmers would not be able to buy an animal for themselves.

County Farm Agent Gaddis and Dr. J. L. Ruble have been advising the farmers of the increasing demand for both dairy and beef cattle and the need of replacing scrub bulls with pure-bred sires to secure the quality the market demands.

Opening of Associated Press News Circuits Direct From New York Marks Epoch in Progress of South

At the top, a view of the news room in Associated Press headquarters in New York, news center of the world. The news report to The Constitution effective May 19, will be filed direct from New York over the high speed trunk wire circuits. An outline of circuits, which will handle the complete Associated Press report, is shown. At the left is General News Editor M. A. White at his desk, from which he directs and supervises the Associated Press report throughout the world. J. H. Snyder, who will file the night report over the new main southern trunk circuits, is shown at the right. At the bottom: This is the busy night office of the A. P. in The Constitution building, where news for the south is cleared. Here the north and south wire from Chicago and the west meets the east and west trunk from New York to New Orleans. The photo shows editors and operators busy handling news dispatches in and out of Atlanta, connecting this point with every part of the world. A large force is on duty every night so that readers may have all the news every morning.

Atlanta Cross Roads Center Of Associated Press Service

Beginning today Atlanta becomes the cross-roads center of the Associated Press news service in the southeastern section of the United States, and the Associated Press night news offices in The Constitution building become the most important news clearing center south of the Ohio river and between the Potomac and the Mississippi.

Here the north and south trunk wires of the Associated Press bringing the news from Chicago, the middle and the far west, and the Asiatic cable news, meet the east and west New York and New Orleans trunk wires installed today, and which will bring for southern distribution news reports from Washington, New York and the middle and eastern states and the trans-Atlantic service from Europe, the new direct New Orleans and New York trunk lines for distributing from Atlanta the news reports from Central and South America, Mexico, the far west and from the islands of the southern Pacific.

The enlarged facilities thus offered by the Associated Press for this section make its Atlanta offices among the most important news distributing centers not only in America, but in the world.

Marking a new stage in the rapid progress of the south, The Associated Press opens today a high speed main trunk wire news service from New York to The Constitution and other member papers in the principal southern cities.

The service will provide The Constitution with the complete news report of the Associated Press and an immediate outlet of southern news through the great system of transmission wires, extending from New York throughout the country.

In addition to the advantages gained in a larger and more varied news report and speed in transmission, through the elimination of relay points, the new circuits will link the south, which has rapidly advanced commercially and industrially, directly with the financial, industrial and news center of the world.

Another important improvement is the inclusion of Washington, which will file all the news developments in the national capital and devote particular attention to stories of special interest to readers in this section of the country.

The general news report, including the full markets and sports services, will be filed by New York, while news originating in the south will be filed on the circuits by the large staff of Associated Press reporters and editors in the 18 bureaus, located at strategic points, and by representatives on the many member newspapers throughout the south.

High speed automatic printers, which transmit 68 words a minute, and a Morse wire, manned with skilled operators, will compose the circuits, operating 24 hours a day.

From New York the circuits run to Baltimore, Washington, Richmond, Charlotte, Atlanta, Birmingham, Montgomery, Mobile and New Orleans. Memphis, Nashville, Knoxville and Chattanooga, on similar circuits, are connected with the main trunk at Atlanta through an automatic relay, which will move the same report instantaneously to papers in these cities.

"The establishment of a new southern trunk circuit by the Associated Press is recognition of the increasing territorial importance of the south and is in conformity with the alert and progressive administration of the world's greatest news gathering organization to supply in fullness of news report the membership of the Associated Press in all sections of the United States, and in turn gather the news from those sections for the benefit of the members throughout the organization," says Frederick I. Thompson, publisher of The Mobile Register and a member of the board of directors of the Associated Press.

"My congratulations to the management upon its vision and high efficiency."

Clark Howell, publisher and editor of The Atlanta Constitution and also a member of the Associated Press board of directors: "To all Associated Press newspapers in this section this announcement should be pleasing. The additional expense involved is trivial as compared with the advantage to be derived from the installation of this service, which brings all New England, New York, Washington and European news for direct distribution throughout the south, thus eliminating the long distance routing and relay by way of Louisville.

"This means more and quicker service and it puts the entire south on the same basis with other parts of the country now having the same kind of service that is to be installed here. The advantage of this new arrangement will become immediately apparent upon installation."

L. M. Blakely, editor, Times-Dispatch, Richmond, Va.:

"It may be some time before the reading public appreciates the full value to the south of the New York-New Orleans trunk service to be instituted by the Associated Press, but newspapermen are awaiting it as the most important extension of service ever made by a news agency in this territory. From the readers' standpoint the new trunk wire means more complete coverage of all national and world events; to the editor it means a saving of from 30 minutes to an hour in the present filing time. The Associated Press has the hearty congratulations of The Times-Dispatch."

L. K. Nicholson, president of the New Orleans (La.) Times-Picayune:

"The greater part of New Orleans' interest in the news field lies in New York city, Washington, the eastern seaboard and in outstanding foreign events. Any change is highly desirable that results in speeding up or making more convenient communication in that direction.

"Transmission of news direct from New York city should eliminate relay point delays that have frequently cost us the loss of good stories for early editions and have on numerous occasions necessitated holding final editions for amplification of flashes."

D'ENGLERE TO OPEN ATLANTA STUDIO FOR DECORATING

D'Englere, nationally-famous decorator with headquarters in Jacksonville, Fla., Tuesday will open an office in Atlanta at 350 Peachtree street, offering people of this city and section expert service in painting, decorating, draperies and furnishings.

The Rialto theater was decorated by D'Englere on the occasion of its reopening here last summer, and at that time the head of this well-known house was impressed with Atlanta's desirability as location of a branch office. A staff of experts in all lines of decorating will be maintained at the Atlanta office, and officials state that they will render a service to homes of moderate means as well as to those demanding elaborate treatment.

PEACH FORECAST OF 9,611 CARS SEEN FOR GEORGIA

Macon, Ga., May 18.—(AP)—The Georgia Peach Growers Exchange tonight made its official estimate of the peach crop for this year, the forecast showing that there will be 9,611 cars marketed. The forecast also states that the bulk of the Georgia peach crop will have been moved by July 15.

Hileys and Elbertas furnish most of the crop in sight, there being 2,552 cars of the former and 4,820 cars of the latter in sight, according to the exchange.

Varieties in the order in which they ripen promise to furnish the following number of cars:

'DRIVE SANELY' RESULTS GOOD, SAY SPONSORS

Safety Council Gratified by General Interest in Campaign.

"Drive Sanely" Week in Atlanta ended Saturday and officials of the Atlanta Safety Council, sponsors of the event, declared they were exceedingly gratified by the results.

C. C. Whitaker was chairman of a special committee from council which also sponsored the campaign.

As a special feature, officials of the Westinghouse Lamp Company, through Charles Adams, staged a series of tests for headlights. It was found that only about 5 in every 100 were in perfect condition.

Incorrect beam adjustment led the field in defects; improper focusing was next; dirty reflectors third; wrong bulbs fifth, and defective equipment last.

The campaign was designed to reduce the number of traffic accidents in Atlanta, which, it is said, increased 50 per cent this year over the first four months of 1928.

"Drive-Walk-Park Sanely" was the slogan of the drive.

Fifteen hundred American boys will pilgrimage to England this summer to take part in the greatest peace-time encampment of boys that the world has ever known. The group will be the official representatives of the Boy Scouts of America at the world jamboree to be held at Birkenhead, across the Mersey river from Liverpool, England, from July 31 to August 13. Fifty thousand Boy Scouts representing 42 different nations will pitch their tents and for two weeks will work and play together. The world jamboree is being held to celebrate the twenty-first birthday of the founding of the Boy Scout movement and also to pay tribute to Sir Robert Baden-Powell, chief scout of the world, who founded the movement. More than 400 acres of ground will be under canvas when the world jamboree opens on July 31.

In patrol units of eight, under adult leaders, the American scouts will embark from a score of different seaports and landing at Liverpool, Harwich, Grimsby, Hull, Goole and Newcastle, will pilgrimage to the jamboree camp. Many of the American scouts will embark on special trains from the various English seaports and be carried to Birkenhead and Upton. From there they will be transported by motor to Arrowe Park, where the world gathering is to be held.

Reports from the international scout bureau, at London, England, state that more than 15,000 Boy Scouts are expected from countries outside of the British empire. The dominions and colonial possessions of Great Britain will send an additional 2,000 scouts to the jamboree and the remainder of the group will be made up of English scouts.

Many notables from continental Europe will be present at the jamboree, for at previous jamborees held at four-year intervals, the kings of England, Sweden and Denmark have attended. This year the Prince of Wales will be a guest at the encampment.

One of the great features of the jamboree this year will be the fellowship meetings in which scouts of every creed will take part.

Old Folks Say Doctor Caldwell was Right

The basis of treating sickness has not changed since Dr. Caldwell left Medical College in 1875, nor since he placed on the market the laxative prescription he had used in his practice, known to druggists and the public since 1892, as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

W. B. Caldwell M.D. AT AGE 83

Then, the treatment of constipation, biliousness, headaches, mental depression, indigestion, sour stomach and other indispositions that result from constipation was entirely by means of simple vegetable laxatives, herbs and roots. These are still the basis of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which is a combination of senna and other mild laxative herbs, with pepsin.

The simpler the remedy for constipation, the safer for the child and for you, and the better for the general health of all. And as you can get results in a mild and safe way by using Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, why take chances with strong drugs?

A bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will last a family several months, and all can use it. It is good for the baby because pleasant to the taste, gentle in action, and free from narcotics. In proper dose, given in the directions, it is equally effective at all ages. Elderly people will find it especially ideal. All drug stores have the generous bottles.

Do give it a trial, to prove how much Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin can mean to you and yours.—(adv.)

COMMITTEE TO STUDY MOTION PICTURE BILL

Proposed Measure Would Revise Ordinance Regulating Houses, Operators.

Study of a proposed revision of present ordinances regulating moving picture houses, operators and equipment will be begun this week by a special sub-committee of the electric lights committee of city council, it was announced Saturday by Alderman G. Everett Millican, of the tenth ward, chairman of the specially appointed body to make the investigation.

The paper is designed to modernize the old ordinances governing amusement houses.

A provision also is made to keep operators abreast of development of the talkies by forcing them to stand examinations and renewing their licenses on or before June 30, of each year.

All wiring, fuses, etc., must be placed in enclosures as a means of reducing fire hazard, according to the new draft, and illuminated signs must mark exits. Storage of films must be in fireproof boxes.

A new examining board composed of the city electrician, chairman of the electric lights committee of city council, the city building inspector and two qualified operators is provided in the new ordinances. A nominal fee for giving the examination is provided and a small charge is made for the annual renewal.

Operators would be required to throw a copy of their licenses on the screen at the end of each performance and the city electrician required to inspect all theaters and booths each month.

A change in the seating arrangement designed also to reduce the fire hazard has been provided.

WOMAN AND SON, OF NEWNAN, HURT IN ACCIDENT HERE

SUTTON URGES PUPILS TO CONTINUE STUDIES

Advice to students not to neglect their studies during the summer months was given Saturday by W. A. Sutton, superintendent of Atlanta schools, in his weekly letter.

Dr. Sutton urged the students to undertake a system of summer activities, which he will outline in the next few days.

The letter in full follows:

My Dear Boys and Girls:

Summer time is coming. We call the summer vacation time because for three months we have no regular routine school duties, but our education goes on in the summer as well as in the winter. Our play, our games, our sports, our vacation trips—whatever we do and whatever we say are helping to fix our characters and to decide our destinies. I am as much interested in what you do in the summer as I am in your regular routine school work in the winter and spring.

Summer Activities.

Within the next few days I shall send to every teacher in Atlanta schools a list of summer activities. I want you to be busy during the vacation months. It is a wonderful time to be of service to your home, where there are thousands of odd jobs which father and mother have which you can do. The garret and basement can be cleaned. Weeds must be kept from the backyard and from the front lot. Empty tin cans must be sent to the garbage, lest water accumulate and mosquitoes come. The streets and sidewalks must be swept, the house must be cleaned, the lawn must be mowed. There are dishes to be washed, beds to be made, automobiles to be cleaned—a thousand duties which you can perform about the home.

Outside of the house and in the community there are many things which we can do for the pleasure and happiness of others. We can take care of a child while mother goes to market or to town. We can lead a troop of Boy Scouts, we may teach others to swim, we can organize a reading club or baseball league. There are errands that we can run for our pastor, our church, our civic league. There are thousands of things we can do for our community.

Go To Sunday School.

Of course, every boy and every girl goes to Sunday school somewhere. It is hard to keep up attendance at Sunday school during the summer. Each of us could promise our Sunday school teacher to see that our attendance at Sunday school is equal to that during the winter. We could visit for our Sunday school teacher, make calls for our pastor. There is so much that we could do to help the church, and the church has meant and does mean so much to the world.

In addition to the home and community and church there are thousands of things that we can do for those round about us. Acts of kindness, words of happiness and smiles of good cheer we can dispense to all. We must not think of the summer as a time for selfish pleasure and selfish indulgence. If we spend all of our summer time thinking about our own selves and of our own happiness and pleasure we will come back to school forgetting how to live in a community where we must work for each other. So I beg of every boy and every girl in Atlanta to see to it that the summer time is spent in kind thoughts, loving words and good deeds.

Always your friend,
WILLIS A. SUTTON,
Superintendent of Schools.

ATLANTA WOMAN SAVED FROM DEATH IN CLEVELAND FIRE

The group illustrated, designed by an American and built in this country, suggest Sheraton in the use of veneers and inlay, and Hepplewhite in the sophisticated use of the curved line. Twin beds, dresser, chest with portable mirror, vanity, bench, nightstand and chair make up this group priced $892. The same with a full-sized bed is $784. This is one of many authentic groupings in Davison's Bedroom Division.

Brenau will celebrate its fiftieth year with a succession of grand operas and other events, beginning May 29 and ending June 3.

Opening the week of festivities, a full grand opera performance of Gounod's "Faust" will be given May 29 at 8:30 p. m. Another opera, Flotow's "Martha," will be given May 31 at 8:30 p. m. Leading parts in both operas will be sung by nationally famous artists. The stars who will appear are:

Judson House, leading tenor of Philadelphia Civic Opera Company, who sings Faust in "Faust" and Lionel in "Martha."

Accompanist.

Corinne Wollersen, New York pianist, will be accompanist. Corinne Turnipseed, of Brenau conservatory faculty, will sing Siebel in "Faust." Morris Ruger, dean of the conservatory, will sing Wagner in "Faust" and the Sheriff in "Martha." The chorus and the orchestra will be made up of students, under direction of Dr. Ben J. Potter, fellow of the Royal College of Organists, London, and Dr. E. B. Michaelis, director, both of the conservatory faculty.

A pageant, "The Skirts of Time," written and directed by Maude Fiske LaFleur, of the school of speech and dramatic art faculty, will be presented on the shores of Brenau lake at 7:30 p. m. Thursday, May 30. This promises to be one of the outstanding features of the celebration.

"Processional of the Fifty Classes" will be the most interesting feature of class day, Saturday, June 1. One or more representatives from each of Brenau's 50 graduating classes, 1879 to 1929, will march in this event. The present senior class will enact the traditional class day exercises, which include an ascent of the "Crow's Nest." On the same day there will be a Brenau movie, "Ye Olden Days," and exhibits from the art studio and the homemakers' cottage.

ASHBY ST. CITIZEN GAINED 15 POUNDS; HEALTH RESTORED

Fame of Sargon Spreads Throughout Nation. Nine Carloads Shipped to California Alone in Thirty Days.

From coast to coast and from the great lakes to the gulf, Sargon is rapidly becoming a household word. The instant and phenomenal demand for the new medicine has set astonishing records everywhere it has been introduced. In California alone it required nine solid car loads, or approximately 235,000 bottles of Sargon and Sargon Soft Mass Pills, to supply the demand in the first thirty days of its introduction in that state. Merit and merit alone can explain such phenomenal success. Tens of thousands of people all over the country are being benefited by this revolutionary new treatment, thousands of them right here in Atlanta. E. P. Parnell, well-known resident of 811 Ashby street, S. W., recently made the following statement:

"Sargon built me up fifteen pounds and gave me new life and strength until I am feeling in better health now than I have in two years.

"I suffered with rheumatism for the past thirty years, and during the last two years I have hardly been able to do any work at my trade. Both legs, from my hips down to my feet, were badly affected and I have hardly been free from misery and pains day or night. At times it was a sharp cutting pain, and again the muscles would become inflamed and burn and itch like I had eczema. I couldn't get any rest and became nervous and distracted. I was badly constipated and suffered from bilious spells, headaches and dizziness. I didn't have any energy or strength and was in such a run down condition that life hardly seemed worth living. I had tried so many different medicines without results that I was badly discouraged.

"But I kept reading about where Sargon was doing so much for others that I finally decided to try it, and I am sure glad now that I did. I could feel myself getting better right from the first. My appetite picked up, I began to gain weight, and before I knew it that terrible itching in the muscles of my legs had gone away. My nervous system is in fine shape as I sleep good now, and I can just feel my old time strength and energy returning every day. I haven't had any more sharp pains in my legs and that rheumatic condition is better than it has been for years. In fact, I'm feeling so good now that I know I will soon be back at my work.

"Since taking the first bottle of Sargon Soft Mass Pills my constipation has been completely overcome and I haven't had a single headache or bilious spell or a sign of dizziness. My whole system has been reconditioned and toned up to new health.

"Every word of this statement is true and I will gladly tell anyone what this wonderful Sargon treatment has done for me."

How Sargon succeeds when all else has apparently failed: how it is bringing health to countless thousands by scientific methods undreamed of a few short years ago; how it seems at the very apex of its powers is those stubborn cases that have defied other treatment for years, are some of the amazing things about this revolutionary new medicine that are being explained to vast throngs daily by the Sargon representative at Jacobs' main store, 6 and 8 Marietta street. Sargon may be obtained at all Jacobs' drug stores throughout Atlanta.—(adv.)

EMBARGO PLACED ON FLORIDA FRUIT IN INFECTED AREA

Additional strength to the federal quarantine against shipment of fruits and vegetables out of Florida from districts known to be infested with the Mediterranean fruit fly came Saturday when Manning S. Yeomans, state entomologist, received a telegram from federal authorities placing a strict embargo on such shipments. The quarantine area includes the southern and southeastern states and the Pacific coast states. Shipments may be made into middle western states, New England states and middle Atlantic states.

P. A. Hoidale, director of government's activities in 10 southern states against the Mediterranean fruit fly, Saturday was seeking suitable offices to house his staff temporarily until permanent headquarters for the fruit fly eradication work can be established here.

Mr. Yeomans and Mr. Hoidale left Atlanta Saturday night for New Orleans to confer with state officials of Louisiana and other states relative to plans for prosecuting the campaign for the eradication of the Mediterranean fruit fly.

POWER CO. TO NAME PLANT FOR ATKINSON

Huge Chattahoochee Station Will Be Monument to Services of Chairman.

The new 100,000-horsepower steam electric generating plant to be erected by the Georgia Power Company on the west bank of the Chattahoochee river, near Atlanta, will be named the Atkinson Steam plant in recognition of the great services of H. M. Atkinson, the chairman of the board of the company, to the development of the electric power industry in Georgia and the south, it was announced Saturday.

In announcing the name of the plant the company pointed out that the designation had been selected as a fitting tribute to the man who first brought electric lights to Atlanta and whose services not only to the development of electric power but also to the progress of Georgia in industrial expansion and in cultural advancement have been outstanding.

Mr. Atkinson, as president of the Georgia Electric Light Company, organized in 1891, built and put into operation Atlanta's first electric lighting system and later with others consolidated the light and electric railway companies into the Georgia Railway and Electric Company. In 1911 he organized the Georgia Railway and Power Company to develop the available water power in the state, and in 1927 formed the Georgia Power Company which now serves 230 communities throughout the state. He has served as the chairman of the board of directors of the Georgia Power Company and its predecessors since 1902.

Although preliminary construction already has been started on this plant, which will be the largest steam generating station in the state, it is not expected to be completed until 1930, due to its great size. Future plans call for the construction of three additional units to be installed as the demand for power increases, but the first unit alone will be able to supply all the needs of Atlanta.

50 PER CENT DIVIDEND DECLARED BY COMPANY

Southern Mutual Insurance Company, Athens, Shows Premium Increase.

Athens, Ga., May 18.—(Special.) At their regular meeting yesterday directors of the Southern Mutual Insurance Company declared a dividend of 50 per cent on the premiums received during the fiscal year ending April 30, 1929. This is the largest dividend paid since the Augusta fire in 1915.

"The statement of the business for the year showed an increase of premiums and interest received and a decrease in losses paid—as compared with last year," President Arthur E. Griffith said. The assets increased from $1,524,144 to $1,598,753, at par value. The estimated market value of assets is approximately $1,650,000, the largest amount ever held by the company.

"The losses for the past year were less than $80,000, and the premiums received were $388,606, making a loss ratio of 20 per cent, which is less than one-half that of other companies. This gratifying result is due in part to the agitation of the subject of "fire prevention" throughout the state, which probably reduced the number of fires."

The annual meeting of the policyholders will be held on June 4, when officers are elected for the ensuing year.

The present officers of the company are Arthur E. Griffith, president and treasurer; Andrew C. Erwin, secretary.

Directors: Arthur E. Griffith, Athens; Andrew C. Erwin, Athens; Robert P. White, Athens; Howell C. Erwin, Athens; Blanton Fortson, Athens; John E. Talmadge, Athens; Charles H. Brand, Athens; Hugh H. Gordon, Jr., Athens; Horace M. Holden, Athens; Jacob P. Joel, Athens; John W. Grant, Atlanta; Henry B. King, Augusta; G. Gunby Jordan, Columbus; Robert J. Taylor, Macon; Henry Blun, Savannah.

GAS REVENUE BILL AMONG 36 HEARD BY FLORIDA SOLONS

Tallahassee, Fla., May 18.—(AP)—Thirty-six new bills, two of them phrased to distribute gasoline tax revenue, were introduced in the Florida legislature today.

Senator Howell, of Panama City, and Senator Council, of Carrabelle, offered a plan in contrast to one of the administration tax bills, for the distribution of the five-cent gasoline tax as follows:

Two cents to the state road department; one-half equally among counties for lateral roads; one and one-half cents to counties to pay bonded indebtedness, if any; if none, the fund would go to the road department for the construction and maintenance of county raods, and one cent to counties for educational purposes.

The second gasoline tax bill, introduced by Representative Turner, of Gilchrist, and Mrs. Fuller, of Orange, would impose an additional one cent gasoline tax, 75 per cent of which would go to public free schools, the remaining one-fourth would be given state institutions of higher learning.

For like disorders in older children, you simply use a little larger dose of the same reliable Fletcher's Castoria. Don't use grown-folks' medicine; with babies or children, specialists say. Ninety per cent of them recommend Fletcher's Castoria; and thirty years of steadily increasing popularity proves they're right. # Georgia To Receive Nail From First White House

:: RELIC TO BE GIVEN ARCHIVES DEPARTMENT ::

Nail taken from first White House.

The Georgia department of archives and history will receive an interesting relic during the week when Attorney-General George M. Napier turns over to that department a large iron nail which once was used in the first White House of the country erected at Washington, D. C.

This nail is made of hand forged iron and was imported from England. When the old White House was burned by the English army in 1814 it was salvaged by a man who handed it down through several generations. The nail came to Attorney-General Napier from a friend in Walton county who asked that her name not be used in connection with the gift. Its history, however, is authentic, according to information furnished the attorney-general.

The British burned the old White House in reprisal for the act of an army of the United States which burned the capitol at Ottawa, Canada, in the same war. The first White House was erected on the site of the present building which was selected by George Washington as a spot for the home of the presidents.

The nail is more than seven inches in length and is notched at different points to make it hold firmly in the wood.

BODY OF LYNCHED MAN AND WIFE SENT TO VALDOSTA

Lake City, Fla., May 18.—(AP)—Bodies of E. R. Romeo, Syrian produce merchant, who was lynched here early yesterday, and his wife, fatally wounded in an altercation with police late Thursday night, were taken to their former home in Valdosta today for burial.

Romeo's body, pierced by 13 bullets, was found in a ditch two miles south of here yesterday after a mob had taken him from the city jail where he was lodged when he made threats against the lives of several policemen.

Mrs. Romeo was fatally wounded by Chief of Police John F. Baker after she had shot him in the shoulder during an argument over the removal of some produce, which Mrs. Romeo had on display in front of her store.

Baker and several officers returned to the store to arrest Romeo. An argument started and Mrs. Romeo wounded Chief Baker, who in turn fatally shot her.

SMALL PLANE WILL TRY FOR RECORD AT JACKSONVILLE

Jacksonville, Fla., May 18.—(AP)—A small cabin monoplane, powered with a 90-horsepower motor, stood ready tonight to take off from Jacksonville Beach tomorrow morning in an attempt to break the endurance record for light aircraft.

Laurie Yonge, veteran Jacksonville pilot, who will take the plane aloft, said he expected to remain in the air for between 22 and 24 hours.

The present record is 13 hours and 19 minutes.

Yonge said he would take aloft 152 gallons of gasoline and five extra gallons of oil. He plans to take off about 10 a. m.

Fully loaded, Yonge said his plane would weigh approximately 2,800 pounds. When empty, the craft weighs about 1,400 pounds.

The pilot planned to make the flight last winter but postponed it when he was unable to obtain proper equipment.

PRIEST ARRESTED

Seven Servants Also Seized by Mexican Police.

Mexico City, May 18.—(AP)—Secret police have arrested Filiberto Villagomes, the priest Justo De Jaraiza and Concepcion Obregon, with seven servants and employes, after a raid on the home of Villagomez, where alleged seditious literature was found.

The police said they had learned of the priest's connection with the group through records and had approached him incognito and sold him 200 rounds of ammunition which they charged he intended taking to the "Cristero" area in the state of Jalisco.

Dispatches to El Universal from Puebla reported a two-hour engagement at Jaguey, Tlaxcala, between 125 alleged "Cristeros" and federals. The insurgents were defeated, abandoning nine dead, among them a colonel. Two federals were killed and seven wounded.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH UNION IS CONSIDERED

General Assembly Orders Proposal Be Taken Under Advisement.

Montreat, N. C., May 18.—(AP)—The general assembly of the Presbyterian church in the United States today had before it for discussion the proposed union with the United Presbyterian Church of North America.

Immediately after Dr. S. L. Morris, of Atlanta, executive secretary of home missions, presented the report of the ad interim committee on closer relations with other Presbyterian bodies, Dr. E. T. Simpson, of Richmond, Va., moved that the assembly approve the basis of union and that it be submitted to the presbyteries for study and approval.

Before debate could be entered into the assembly voted to have the full report read.

Reports Are Heard.

The assembly heard a large number of reports this morning and an address by William L. Frierson, of Chattanooga, on the duties and obligations of elders. Mr. Frierson, who has been an elder in his congregation for 30 years, told the assembly that virtually the only difference between an elder of the church and a minister is that the pastor's religious work is his regular vocation and means of livelihood while the elder must make his living by secular work.

"The elder in the session," he said, "must strive to promote peace and harmony and Christian fellowship in the congregation; keep a watchful oversight over all church activities and insist that the simple gospel of Jesus Christ be preached from the pulpit.

"Practically the only difference between a pastor and an elder is that the pastor's religious work is his regular vocation and his means of livelihood while the elder must gain support for himself and family in some gainful occupation."

Strides Being Made.

Great strides are being made in the matter of near east relief, Dr. R. E. Magill, of Richmond, Va., chairman of the committee on that subject, told the assembly. He said that in the southern section of the near east "where boys of 16 and 17 are now beginning to earn their own livings by reason of having the great new education made possible by the near east relief which brings their heads and hands together," great progress was being made.

The report on Protestant relief in Europe was read by Dr. J. I. Vance, of Nashville.

The report of the committee on preparation of correspondence courses for ministers, signed by Dr. R. T. Gillespie, of Atlanta, and presented by the stated clerk, recommended continuation of the committe. It added, however, that there were very few requests for such work, and that it seemed that the seminaries should in some way provide for the proposed courses.

Higher Duties Demanded By Farm State Republicans At Committee's Session

Garner Proposes Sliding Scale Sugar Tariff as Effective Means To Keep Cheap Sugar.

Washington, May 18.—(AP)—The house took a day off today after eight days of debate on tariff bill, but farm state republicans continued to plead for higher duties on agricultural products before the ways and means committee republicans in executive session.

Representative Garner, of Texas, the minority leader, announced that if the opportunity arose he would propose an amendment to the sugar schedule providing a sliding scale of duties instead of the 2.40 cents a pound on Cuban raw sugar carried in the bill. The present rate in 1.76 cents.

Under Garner's proposal, which may be offered on the floor only in event the republicans decide to open the sugar schedule for amendment, the highest duties would be effective after the New York price minus duty, had dropped to a low point. The rates would be less as the price increased and after it reached five cents a pound, no tariff at all would be collected.

As an example, Garner said if Cuban raw sugar was selling for 1 cent a pound at New York the duty would be 3.20 cents, making the wholesale price, plus duty, 4.20 cents.

At one and one half cents, the duty would be 2.80; at 2 cents 2.40; at 2 1-2 cents, 2.00; at 3 cents, 1.60; at 3 1-2 cents, 1.20; at 4 cents .80; at 4 1-2 cents, .40, and at 5 cents, no duty.

The Texan said he understood his proposed rates were not acceptable to the "sugar people" but appeared to him to be a "fair, just and equitable solution of the problem."

"If one must judge by past experience," he said, "it will give to the American people not exceeding 5 1-2c sugar at all time, which I think is a reasonable price, and constitutes the cheapest food in America.

Know What To Pay.

"Moreover, it will enable the beet and cane sugar people to know in advance that they are going to receive at least $4.20 per one hundred pounds for 96 degree sugar and they could plant their crops accordingly. This proposal would probably stop in the future continued agitation as to the sugar rate. When Cuban sugar was selling low, as it is now, the rates would be high.

When Cuban sugar was selling high the rates would be low.

"It seems to me this is to the best interest of all concerned, Cuba as well as the United States. I submit the suggestion for the consideration of the country as well as the house of representatives."

The idea of the sliding scale sugar tariff is understood to be receiving some study from advisers of President Hoover, who have indicated disapproval of the rates carried in the pending bill. The exact basis upon which they have been working, however, has not been disclosed.

Republican members of the ways and means committee who framed the pending measure, also are split on the sugar rate provided by the bill. Democrats, in debate to date, have been a unit against the 2.40 cents recommendation. Organized labor, through William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor has described the bill duty as indefensible. Representatives from beet sugar raising states, on the other hand have declared solidly for it.

Tariff Urged.

The spokesman for a group of members from ten western states, Representative Dickinson, republican, Iowa, expressed the belief that duties would be obtained on hides and tapioca, now on the free list, and said he thought the chances were good for obtaining higher rates on live cattle, casein and dried milk.

However, Dickinson said that he did not think the chances for higher tariffs on butter and blackstrap for distilling purposes were bright. Farm state members have sought higher duties on the article, Representative William E. Hull, republican, Illinois, appearing before the republicans of the ways and means committee today to urge a duty of eight cents a gallon on blackstrap as against the two cents proposed in the bill and the one-sixth of a cent prevailing now.

Other Revenues Urged.

Representative Woodruff, republican, Michigan, and Brand, republican, Ohio, urged higher duties on dried beans, potatoes and onions. Brand also said he thought the present 25 per cent duty on canned tomatoes should be raised to 40 per cent.

Ways and means committee republicans ended today the supplemental hearings at which suggestions for changes in the bill have been made daily since last Tuesday.

Although western republicans have predominated at the supplemental hearings seeking high tariffs on agricultural products, many members from the industrial east have advanced proposed amendments, particularly for duties on leather and boots and shoes, all now on the free list. A duty on these commodities is believed largely to depend on whether a tariff is placed on hides which the farm group is advocating.

The republican committeemen will begin a series of exeutive sessions next week to determine whether any of the proposals received warrant their submittal on the floor as committee amendments. Another republican conference to decide on an amendment limiting rule is not expected to be held until Tuesday or Wednesday and meanwhile general debate will be continued in the house.

Chairman Hawley said today he hoped the house could pass the bill by the end of next week or before June 1 at the latest.

Jewish Charities Here Are Surveyed By Edward Kahn

Survey of work by the Atlanta Federation of Jewish Charities in the last year and its development of a program designed to cover every human need from early childhood to old age, was made Saturday by Edward M. Kahn, its executive director, in relating its service to the city-wide program of social welfare of the Atlanta Community Chest, in connection with which the federation operates.

With five departments, each covering a distinct field of service, the Federation of Jewish Charities was described as constituting a minor "community chest" in itself. For the most part concerned with social welfare among people of the Jewish faith, thus relieving the other 38 agencies of the Community Chest of responsibility in that direction, Mr. Kahn explained, the federation maintains in the Morris Hirsch Clinic a non-sectarian institution in which surgical treatment is available for the poor of the entire community, irrespective of faith.

Besides the Morris Hirsch Clinic, according to the survey, the federation maintains the Morris Lichtenstein free loan fund, for small loans to members of the Jewish faith who are unable to obtain that necessary assistance elsewhere, and the Montefiore Relief Association, which is concerned with administering relief in cases of needy families or individuals.

CITY'S AFFAIRS FOUND TO BE WELL MANAGED

Preliminary survey of the Atlanta city government which has been made by a citizens' advisory committee named by Mayor I. N. Ragsdale shows that municipal affairs here are in much better condition than in other cities where similar investigations have been conducted, Robert F. Maddox, chairman, announced Saturday in stating that the committee is planning to ask every one of the 40-odd departments for a report as to personnel and duties, as a preliminary to a more detailed study.

A questionnaire will be sent out by Mayor I. N. Ragsdale asking for the reports, and it will be turned over to various sub-committees of the citizens' committee to aid in making intelligent and constructive recommendations designed to improve local governmental conditions.

The mayor, Mr. Maddox, C. F. Palmer and Herbert E. Choate, the latter three members of the executive committee of the citizens' advisory body, held a conference in the mayor's suite at the city hall Saturday morning.

"Our preliminary studies convince us that the Atlanta municipal government is operated in a manner far superior to most others where similar surveys have been made," Mr. Maddox declared. "We held a meeting Friday afternoon and decided that a statement from various department heads would be of infinite value to us in our studies and are asking that the reports be filed as soon as is possible.

"It probably will be in the fall before we are ready to make definite recommendations. We are just now engaged in much technical study which would not be of interest. All our committees are working hard and faithfully and we believe we will be in a position soon to make a series of recommendations which will react to the benefit of all Atlanta."

WARRANT ISSUED FOR MAN WHO WAS SHOT BY GUARD

Dothan, Ala., May 18.—(AP)—A warrant for the arrest of Joe Long, Selma, Ala., salesman, who reported last Monday night that he was shot by an Alabama national guardsman as he entered this state from Florida at a point near here, was in the hands of Sheriff C. J. Rollins, of Houston county, tonight.

The warrant was sworn out by James M. Moore, chief of the markets division of the state department of agriculture following an investigation of Long's charges. Moore stated that he found evidence to indicate that Long had "obstructed, interfered, and hindered an agent of the Alabama department of agriculture in the performance of his duty." Under the Alabama code such an act is classified as a misdemeanor.

The specific charges, Moore said, involved breaking of the Alabama quarantine law against Florida fruits and vegetables infested by the Mediterranean fruit fly, which demands that all travelers must come to a complete halt when signaled by guardsmen, empowered to enforce the quarantine, and submit to search of their vehicles.

The case has been set for trial June 3, in the probate court of Houston county.

HOUSTON COURT WILL CONVENE MONDAY AT PERRY

Perry, Ga., May 18.—(Special.)—Houston superior court will convene Monday morning and will be in session the whole week. There are 63 civil cases on the calendar for trial, many of which will be tried. There are 55 criminal warrants to be passed on by the grand jury.

At the last term of the court in February the grand jury did not examine the books of the county officers for the reason that they were being audited by public accountants. Among these books were the books of S. P. Crowell, tax collector of the county, who has since resigned his office and left the county. Auditors have completed their work and will have their report ready for grand jury when it meets next Monday, which report will disclose an alleged shortage.

$50,000 SUIT FILED

Woman Seeks Damages for Death of Son.

A suit for $50,000 for the death of her son, Sammie Lynn, 20, truck farmer, was filed in city court of Atlanta Saturday by Mrs. J. B. Blalock against the Georgia Power Company. The plaintiff claims that her son was killed by a fallen high-voltage wire while walking to a spring near his home. The accident occurred on March 31, and her son died the following day, the petitioner alleges. The suit was filed by Attorney Lawton Nalley.

Both of these girls, as authors of the best letters giving reasons "Why My Parents Should Send Me to Camp," will be awarded a camp scholarship with full tuition paid for a season of eight weeks at their choice of the following camps: Camp Dixie, Clayton, Ga.; Eagles' Nest camp, Brevard, N. C.; Ko Wee Ta camp, Fairburn, Ga.; Laurel Falls camp, Clayton, Ga; Camp Onteora, Cashiers, N. C.; Camp Parry-Dise, Highland, N. C.; Camp Takeda, Gainesville, Ga.

Announcement that Rich's, Inc., would sponsor a camp contest among southern girls of 14 years or under met with enthusiastic response throughout the southern states. Over 150 eligible entries had been registered by the closing date, May 1. Miss Jessie Muse, principal of Girls' High school; Miss Myra N. Graves, superintendent, physical education, and Rev. N. R. H. Moor, rector of St. Luke's Episcopal church, all of Atlanta, acted as judges. In addition to the winners, they selected the following as worthy of honorable mention: Natalie Hughes, Stillman, Ga.; Toot Jackson, Savannah, Ga.; Majorie Purnell, Atlanta; Tallulah Davis, Atlanta; Mary Heins, Savannah; Winifred Chaplin, Atlanta; Clifford Parsons, Flowery Branch, Ga.; Catherine Jones, Macon, Ga.; Ella Pearl Pinson, Hapeville, Ga.; Ruth Henderson, Atlanta; Martha Stone, Carrollton, Ga.; Catherine Calloway, East Point, Ga.

Miss Katherine Culberson, of Rich's, head of the camp bureau, stated that the large majority of the letters were interesting, original and strikingly sincere, revealing more than a little literary talent among camp-minded girls.

Capone Gangsters Strive To Obtain Leader's Release

Seek Conference With Lawyers on Means of "Springing" Underworld Czar From Eastern Pen.

GANGLAND DOUBTS PEACE PACT RUMOR

Hoodlums Believe "Scarface" Has Contrived Alibi for Next Wholesale Beer War Slaughter.

Chicago, May 18.—(AP)—Unless "the chief" himself stops them, Al Capone's Chicago followers will make an attempt next week to obtain his release from prison in Philadelphia, using every possible legal advice, it was learned tonight from Thomas D. Nash, who has been Capone's counsel on several occasions.

At the same time it was revealed that the gang chieftain's followers are in the dark as to the reason for his seemingly willing submission to arrest.

May Want To Stay.

Attorney Nash said that he had received a telephone call yesterday from a man, whose identity he did not care to reveal, asking that a conference be arranged between Capone men and the law firm of Nash & Michael Ahern. The caller said the "boys" wanted counsel to go to Philadelphia to see Capone and learn if he was being held against his will. If he is, Nash was told, the gang wants legal steps instituted at once to obtain the leader's release, if possible.

What steps would be taken in case it was learned that Capone wanted to remain in jail remained problematical.

The conference was set for next week, probably Monday, following the return of Ahern from French Lick, Ind., where he has gone on business.

Doubt Murder Truce.

Nash's revelation came while police, gangsters and common citizens alike were wondering whether Capone's imprisonment meant cessation or intensification of Chicago underworld warfare.

Hoodlums generally expressed skepticism about the reported peace pact between Capone and George "Bugs" Moran. Some of them hinted their belief that Capone had ordered Moran's death and had arranged to be in jail so that he would have an alibi when the deed was committed.

Moran blamed Capone for the slaying of seven of his men in the St. Valentine's day massacre and the recent killing of the Capone trio near Hammond, Ind., is generally believed to have been a Moran gang reprisal.

With Capone in jail, Moran is now looked upon as the "big shot" in Chicago gangland and the anxious request of a Capone follower for a conference with the lawyers is looked upon as a step to learn the situation before starting a campaign for power. If Al is going to stay in jail, and step out of "the racket," as he has said, his followers do not intend to stand idly by and see Moran get the vast profits from vice, police believe.

PHILADELPHIA SAYS AL FOUGHT HARD.

Philadelphia, May 18.—(AP)—It became known today that "Scarface Al" Capone, man of affairs in Chicago's underworld, under sentence of one year's imprisonment for carrying a loaded pistol in this city, made desperate efforts through his attorneys to save himself from going to prison, or failing in that, to have the court give a short sentence.

The court refused to grant any leniency and treated him and his bodyguard exactly as it has been treating other offenders of the law, convicted of carrying concealed deadly weapons.

Judge John E. Walsh, of the criminal division of the municipal court, said he did not take seriously the opinion held in some quarters that Capone walked into a police trap to save himself from rival gangsters. "The case of Capone wsa handled like any other case," said the judge. "Before he and Cline were placed on trial, I had sentenced two other men for the same offense and each was given the maximum prison sentence, one year."

Bernard L. Lemisch, who, with Cornelius Haggarty, Jr., represented the gangsters, revealed that he had made proposals to Judge Walsh for liberty or for leniency, before Capone and Cline had entered their pleas of guilty.

"My conversations at side-bar with the judge," Lemisch said, "involved my pleas for leniency for Capone and Cline. Judge Walsh would not consider anything but the maximum sentence, I had to bow to his judgment."

James (Shoocy) Malone and John Creedon, the two Philadelphia detectives who "spotted" the two Chicago gangsters in the theater crowd Thursday night, gave their version of the arrest today after they had been commended by Superintendent of Police William B. Mills for their alertness.

"From the remarks that Capone made to me I am sure he was anything but pleased in being sent to jail said Malone: "Once a gang leader is put behind bars it ends his prestige." He has shown he is not stronger than the law, and that ends him. Capone's career as a gang leader is over.

GANGSTER MOVED TO NEW PRISON.

Philadelphia, May 18.—(AP)—"Scarface Al" Capone, sent to the county prison yesterday for one year for carrying a loaded pistol, was today removed from Moyamensing prison, in South Philadelphia, to the Holmesburg prison, in Northeast Philadelphia, along with Frank Cline, his bodyguard, who is under a similar sentence.

15 MORE DEATHS FEARED IN BLAST OF OHIO HOSPITAL

124th Victim Succumbs Saturday; Gas Sufficient To Kill 4,000,000, Chemists Declare.

Cleveland, May 18.—(AP)—Fifteen of fifty persons still in hospitals were fighting against deadly effects of poison gases they inhaled in the Cleveland clinic disaster are not expected to recover, doctors said tonight, and the others probably will suffer lung troubles for years to come. The death toll stood at 124. Mrs. Arthur Richards, of Sharon, Pa., died today, three days after the blast.

Oxygen treatment was continued for those in hospitals and some of them were given transfusion of blood.

Investigations of the tragedy will continue Monday, Coroner A. J. Pearse said. Much of today's inquest was held in secret.

Would Wipe Out State.

Under direction of the coroner, a vivid picture of the beginning of the catastrophe was presented just before the Sunday adjournment was taken, by Buffery Boggs, steam fitter, star witness in the investigation.

Down in the charred basement storeroom where fire in X-ray films released the deadly gases of the disaster—which chemists today said was enough to have killed 4,000,000 people—Boggs re-enacted the opening scenes.

The steamfitter showed where he was working when he observed smoke coming from the storage room. "I saw no fire," he said.

Boggs showed the investigators then how he had grabbed a fire extinguisher and played in upon the smouldering films, only to find that the smoke increased. He told how he finally felt himself being overcome and showed where he escaped through a trap door to the outside of the building.

Despite all their investigation, however, Coroner Pearse and the officials who are working with him are partly baffled by the case. They hope to have a "final sum-up" of the tragedy, however, next week.

36 Victims Buried.

Members of the coroner's commission include County Prosecutor Miller, General H. L. Gilchrist, chief of the United States Chemical Warfare service; Commander D. C. Walton, of the United States Naval Medical bureau; J. J. Fournier, state industrial inspector, and John E. Cranshaw, of the United States bureau of mines.

Thirty-six victims of the disaster were buried here today. Among them was Dr. John Phillips, a co-founder of the clinic, and Dr. Charles Edward Locke, brain specialist, another member of the clinic staff.

Throughout the day, Cleveland was in official mourning for the dead. The huge American flag in Public square and others throughout the city were drawn to half mast.

Financial relief for many of the bereaved of the tragedy was promised today from the state workmen's compensation fund. Will T. Blake, director of industrial relations, reported to Governor Mayers Y. Cooper that about $300,000 would be paid by the state in death claims to dependents of clinic employes who were killed. There were about 40 of the employes in the death list.

The maximum death claim is $6,500 plus $150 for funeral expenses.

At the clinic's temporary headquarters across the street from the damaged building, builders will work tomorrow to complete alterations and installations of new equipment for its temporary use by the surviving doctors of the clinic.

The original clinic will be rebuilt and in use again in about six weeks.

'LEGGER WHO SOLD LIQUOR TO DRIVER HELD FOR MURDER

Chicago, May 18.—(AP)—Accused of selling liquor to two men whose careening automobile killed two boys and seriously injured two others yesterday, John Nelson, 28, was held on a charge of accessory to murder.

The coroner's jury also recommended William Sweeney, 27, driver of the car, be held on a manslaughter charge and his companion, Frank O'Dee, be held as an accessory to manslaughter. Sweeney and O'Dee were arrested after their car plowed through the group of youngsters playing in the street. Police said they were intoxicated, and the pair admitted buying liquor and named Nelson as the bootlegger. They were driving a stolen car.

Jerome Boyd, 13, and Robert Hemmel, 12, was fatally hurt. Leroy Rousseau, 13, and Harold O'Grady, 13, were injured seriously.

DARING ROBBERY STORY IS TOLD POLICE OFFICERS

E. L. Birdsong, of 1121 Hardee street, reported to Call Officers Goode and Carroll that he was held up and robbed in a local office building shortly after noon Saturday.

Birdsong told the officers that two young men accosted him as he walked into an office, one thrusting a knife into his side and another pointing a gun at him. Birdsong resisted and as he sounded an alarm, a cloth evidently containing a drug of some kind was placed against his nose, he claimed. The bandits escaped with $223 which had just been drawn from a local bank.

A Lane Drugstore, at 208 Peachtree street, was robbed of $106 during Friday night, according to police reports. The shortage was discovered Saturday morning when the safe was opened.

Why Not Connect Them—NOW!

Tate Plans To Complete Trunk Highways of State

:: NEW CHAIRMAN WANTS TO PAVE "GAPS" ::

One of the first steps to be taken by the state highway department under its new chairman, Sam Tate, of Tate, Ga., who will assume office June 5, will be to work out a plan under which numerous paved stretches running north and south and east and west across the state will be connected by pavement to replace present top soil roads, it was learned at the capitol.

One glance at the accompanying map above shows that Georgia now has a crazy-quilt system of trunk highways all built under the old policy of the board, but a system which can be linked up into adequate trunk highways across the state north to south and east to west through the construction of a number of connecting links.

The old county-seat to county-seat policy was the cause of the present situation. Under a new policy the highway board will seek to connect up the paved trunk roads. At present there is not one single paved road that runs entirely across the state in any direction. The nearest approach is the road from Toccoa to Atlanta to West Point but there is one long gap in this road between Baldwin and Gainesville. From Atlanta to the Florida line it is paved all the way with the exception of one short stretch between Cordele and Tifton. But this road north to Chattanooga is "gappy" part of it being paved and part unpaved.

Running east and west across the state there is no completed paved road. There are several routes that can be made trunk highways through the construction of paved roads over the present gaps and it is to these roads that the highway board, under its new policy, will turn its early attention.

No blame for the present "patchwork" system is to be placed on any officials, as it is the result of the county-seat to county-set plan adopted by the legislature. The situation north and south is not as bad as the situation east and west but it will be the policy of the new board to connect up these roads as rapidly as possible so that several new trunk roads, paved all the way, will be found running both from the north to the south and from the east to the west and vice versa.

PRESIDENT SPENDS NIGHT IN WOODS

Virginia Fishing Preserve Displaces White House as Hoover Seeks Rest; Eschews Fishing.

Madison, Va., May 18.—(United News.)—In one of five brown army tents which formed a modest camp in the Shenandoah National park near here, the president of the United States is sleeping tonight after an invigorating day in the open air.

The streams of the fishing preserve which has been set aside for his use failed to lure him today, but the president appeared to enjoy tramping over the country in the vicinity of the camp. The weather has been excellent.

Mrs. Hoover, who had left the White House for the camp site at 7:30 this morning to have all in readiness for the president, returned to the White House at 6 p. m. Mr. Hoover left for the camp at 10:30 a. m. The other members of the party who accompanied him and are spending the night at the camp are Lawrence Richey, one of his secretaries; Lieutenant Commander Joel Boone, his physician; Secretary of Interior Wilbur, and Edward Lowrey, a magazine writer.

They expect to return to Washington in time for church services tomorrow morning.

Wooden floors have been built in the camping tents and electric lights installed. A direct telephone line to the White House makes it possible for Mr. Hoover to be reached instantly in the event of emergency.

Holly Bend Levee On Arkansas River Broken by Flood

Russellville, Ark., May 18.—(AP)—The Holly Bend levee on the Arkansas river, 12 miles southeast of here, broke early today and approximately 1,500 acres of farm lands were being flooded. A heavy rain and windstorm caused the break about 100 yards wide.

WORK ON STATION BEGINS THIS WEEK

President Hill, of N., C. & St. L., Announces That Entire Project Will Be Ready by Late Fall.

Actual start on track adjustments which will be necessary to erect the new Union depot at a point at the north end of the Forsyth street viaduct will begin this week and the entire Union station project will be completed by late fall or early winter, it was announced Saturday in a telegram to Mayor I. N. Ragsdale from James B. Hill, president of the N., C. & St. L. Railway.

In his message, Mr. Hill declared that the railroad contemplates reconstruction of the northern span of the viaduct to allow traffic into and out of the new project and suggests that the city rebuild the other at the same time. This, it was pointed out Saturday, would enhance the improvement still further. The old bridge has about served its usefulness, according to officials, and should be replaced.

No delay will be experienced in pushing the project to rapid and uninterrupted completion.

Organization of forces to make the track changes necessary already has been started and it is the plan of railway officials to start work this week. Specifications and plans for the depot are being rushed and bids will be asked just as soon as they are completed.

Mr. Hill's message to the mayor follows, and is in answer to one sent to the railway official Friday congratulating him on the program of development and urging him to rush it to completion:

"Your telegram yesterday. Have requested that detailed specifications of new depot be completed and bids taken from Atlanta concerns and others for as quick construction as possible. We now are organizing forces to begin work immediately for track division in yards. This should actually start next week. It is our hope that entire facility will be completed by late fall or early winter. Our plans contemplate reconstruction one span Forsyth street viaduct. Seems to me would be highly desirable that city also arrange for reconstruction of other span."

INCREASE IN CITY'S REVENUE SOUGHT

Council To Consider Proposal Designed To Bring "Invisible Taxable Assets" to Light.

Members of city council at their semi-monthly meeting Monday afternoon will consider a proposal offered by a special committee and designed to increase the city's revenue approximately $3,000,000 annually by forcing entry of "invisible assets on the tax books for taxation."

Among other important matters slated for consideration of council will be a proposal to increase the term of the mayor from two to four years; terms of aldermen from three to four years, and those of council members from two to three years, as well as a proposal to annex all of land lots 110, 103 and 57 and that portion of land lots 56 to 104 lying in the seventeenth district of Fulton county.

Tom Smith, chairman of the municipal research and statistics committee, will report the findings of the committee in its survey to ascertain whether there is a combine among local gasoline vending companies to control the price of products sold here. The report will show that there is not a combine, and that Atlantans bought gasoline in 1928 and are buying it now at an "advantageous figure as compared with other cities in the east and south."

Murphy to Offer Plan.

The proposed charter amendment, which "would place teeth in the present tax laws and thus increase the city's revenue to such a point that there would be sufficient funds with which to make many needed improvements in Atlanta," will be offered by Alderman J. Charlie Murphy, of the eleventh ward, who was chairman of a composite committee representing the finance committee of city council, the Atlanta board of education and a special citizens' advisory committee named by Mayor I. N. Ragsdale to seek financial relief for the municipal government.

Salient features of the plan are authorizing tax assessors to take testimony, compel attendance on hearings and force individuals to testify or be adjudged in contempt in an effort to get the intangible assets on the tax digests; increasing the penalty for failure to make prompt returns of such valuables and securities from 10 per cent as at the present time to 50 per cent; and providing a penalty for perjury or failure to make correct returns.

All persons residing in Atlanta or doing business within the city would fall under the ordinance provisions, if it is approved.

Aimed Against Big Holders.

The latter effort is aimed to prevent large stockholders from moving their residences outside the city limits while maintaining businesses inside, thus escaping the levy on securities.

Papers looking toward increase of the tenure of office of the mayor and other city officials, also provide that the mayor may succeed himself as many times as the people of Atlanta elect him. These provisions have the unanimous approval of the charter revision committee of council and will be offered by Alderman Ed Gilliam, of the twelfth ward.

Annexation proposal would extend the city limits northward on Peachtree road to a point between the Seaboard railway and Blackman's sanitarium. The line then would run along the northern extremity of land lots 110, 103 and 57, extending southward to the present city limit line.

On the east it would extend nearly to Piedmont road and on the west to a line parallel to Anjaco road. It would include all the Ansley park golf course, the Collier estate in landlot 103, Brookwood Hills and Rock Springs.

ATLANTA-CHICAGO MAIL LINE BOUGHT BY AVIATION CORP.

Purchasers of S. A. T. System Complete North-South Chain in Acquisition of Interstate.

Fort Worth, Texas, May 18.—(Special.)—Acquisition of Interstate Airlines, Inc., holders of the Atlanta-Chicago air mail contract, by the Aviation Corporation, $200,000,000 company, was announced here today in telegrams from Graham B. Grosvenor, president of the Aviation Corporation, in New York city.

Grosvenor's company two weeks ago announced the purchase of Southern Air Transport, Inc., holders of the Atlanta-New Orleans air mail contract. Interstate control will link S. A. T. lines in Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi and Georgia with Universal, Embry Riddle and Colonial Airways lines in the west and east, all of which are controlled by the Aviation Corporation.

Describing Interstate Airlines as the vital link between his corporation's southern and northern groups, Grosvenor declared that the line, which reaches from Atlanta north to Chattanooga, Nashville, Evansville, Terre Haute and Chicago, as "the air transport funnel through which virtually all aerial mail and passenger traffic originating in the northwest and middle west flows into the south and thence into Central and South America."

Exchange of Stock.

Rumors emanating from Chicago that Interstate now was controlled by the Aviation Corporation were confirmed by Grosvenor in the statement that control was acquired by an exchange of stock from United Aviation, Inc., a holding company.

Robert W. Woodruff, of Atlanta, president of the Coca-Cola Company, is a director of Aviation Corporation, and A. P. Barrett, president of S. A. T., is vice president and member of the executive committee of the corporation.

"Acquisition of Interstate Airlines," Grosvenor said in New York Saturday, "not only increases to approximately 5,800 miles the extent of established air transport services the Aviation Corporation now controls, but it serves as a vital link between the northern and southern groups of lines we previously obtained. It is the air transport funnel through which virtually all aerial mail and passenger traffic originating in the northwest and midwest flows into the south and thence into Central and South America.

Network Now Joined.

"Heretofore our transport companies have consisted of two separated systems. In the north, the Universal, Embry Riddle and Colonial Airways extend from Minneapolis and St. Paul to Montreal and Boston. In the south the Southern Air Transport Lines stretch from Atlanta to El Paso, going south to the Mexican border at Brownsville and touching the Gulf of Mexico at Galveston and Corpus Christi and including New Orleans. The Interstate Airlines, with its junction at Chicago with the Universal Airlines, and at Atlanta with the Southern Air Transport Lines, now joins these two networks into one. More than 4,400 of its 5,800 miles of mail airways are flown under government contract.

"The main interstate line extends 632 miles from Chicago to Atlanta through Terre Haute, Evansville, Nashville and Chattanooga, and a 145-mile spur from St. Louis joins the trunk line at Evansville.

"Interstate's fleets of Fairchilds and Stearmans fly 1,536 miles in daily schedule over these routes."

INTERSTATE IMPORTANT TRANSPORTATION LINK.

Rumors that the Aviation Corporation had been negotiating for control of Interstate Air Lines, Inc., reached Atlanta during last week, but little definite could be learned prior to the announcement from Fort Worth Saturday afternoon.

Interstate, one of the three companies operating airmail schedules out of Atlanta, blazed the first regular aerial trail between this city and Chicago, aviation metropolis of America. Of the remaining two, St. Tammany-Gulf Coast Airlines, Inc., was acquired last January by Southern Air Transport, Inc., which in turn was purchased two weeks ago by Aviation Corporation when announcement was made that the big Universal lines, Embry-Riddle and Colonial Airways lines also became a part of the greater system.

Interstate is represented in Atlanta by J. B. Price as division traffic manager. Lieutenant-Colonel W. G. Schauffler, Jr., is vice president and general manager, and headquarters for the company are located at Evansville, Ind.

The company uses Stearman mail planes and Fairchild six-place cabin planes. From Evansville, an airmail connecting link shoots off to St. Louis. Another branch from Evansville is planned to Louisville, Ky.

At Evansville, Interstate is making improvements which will include a school as well as administration offices. Recently the company acquired a field of its own near Nashville, which it is improving.

Morrows Fly To Seclusion With Lindy

Colonel Eludes Reporters by Leaving From Heart of Gotham.

New York, May 18.—(AP)—Col. Charles A. Lindbergh pulled a fast one on the newspaper boys today in the game of hide and seek that is the order of the day as the date for his marriage draws near.

The colonel keeps his own plane at Roosevelt field and when he wants to use another is accustomed to get it there or at one of the Long Island fields. It has got so he can't get near any of those fields without being spotted. So when he wanted to fly his financee, her mother, her two sisters and a secretary to Maine today he had to think up a new one.

What he did was to go to seaplane dock in the East river at the foot of East Thirty-first street and borrow a new amphibian eight-place air yacht from the Loening division of the Keystone Aircraft company.

And just at noon he roared into the air almost from the heart of Manhattan with no one being the wiser.

COLONEL PARKS PLANE UNDER TREE.

North Haven, Maine, May 18.—(AP) Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh, his fiancee, Miss Anne Morrow, and other members of her family rested in seclusion tonight at the Morrow summer estate on this little island, 12 miles off the coast of Maine.

The colonel, Miss Morrow, her two sisters, Constance and Elizabeth and Mrs. Morrow landed about mid-afternoon in a little cove in Penobscot bay before the Morrow home. They were accompanied by Josephine Graham, Mrs. Morrow's secretary.

Soon after the dinner hour the entire group bundled themselves into a beach car and drove away, presumably on a trip about the roads on the western end of the island. Anne Morrow was driving. Lindbergh was seated beside her, with another of the sisters on the other side. Before leaving for the pleasure jaunt, the colonel taxied the plane up the beach and "parked" it on the Morrow lawn, close to a large evergreen tree.

No information regarding the plans of the couple was given out, but the "official spokesman" whose name was not divulged, said he would hold a conference with members of the press tomorrow morning.

INDICT CRUSADERS FOR OBSCENITY

Anti-Evolutionists Are Charged With Having Sent Objectionable Matter Through Mails.

Tallahassee, Fla., May 18.—(AP)—A movement instituted several years ago by A. Pichard and L. A. Tatum, Tallahassee, against the alleged teaching of evolution and use of immoral text books in two Florida colleges has reached the court it developed today.

A federal court grand jury yesterday returned indictments at Pensacola against Tatum and Pichard for using the mails for alleged obscene literature. A pamphlet used by the two in conducting the fight against the text books, purporting to carry extracts from books declared to have been found in the libraries of the Florida State College for Women and University of Florida, and entitled "psychoanalysis, or filthy dreamers" brought the indictments.

In a statement issued here today, Pichard and Tatum said the pamphlet was a reproduction of their report on the alleged use of the books, made to the state board of education, and that it contained "actual quotations from text and reference books found in actual use with students at Florida State College for Women and at the University of Florida."

"Pending receipt of a copy of the indictment charges and conference with our attorney, we have no statement to make other than to call attention to the fact that he alleged obscene matter contained in the pamphlet is absolutely confined to a reproduction of our requested report to the state board of education, which contained actual quotations from text and reference books found in actual use with students at Florida State College for Women and at the University of Florida," the statement said. "Said report contained our solemn protest against the use of said books carrying such subversive teaching.

"If our pamphlet is to be debarred from the mails, despite the foregoing, we claim the Bible, which relates sin only to condemn it, even as does our pamphlet may be just as consistently debarred.

"We are quite willing to be the victims of persecution and prosecution hoping thereby the true situation in our colleges and universities may be brought home to the minds and hearts of Christian parents."

Pichard is a local lumber dealer, and Tatum is a retired business man. They instituted their movement against the text books in 1926. Various church officials, including the Southern Presbytery, endorsed the campaign, and the matter was referred to the state board of education, composed of the governor and cabinet members. The board requested the state board of control to investigate the complaint, and the latter body advised Tatum and Pichard that the books objected to had been removed.

JUNE 20TH IS SET FOR NEW TAKE-OFF OF GRAF ZEPPELIN

Commander Scouts Theory of Sabotage, Says Engines Were Worn Out By Previous Trip.

REGARD FOR FRANCE RAISED BY RESCUE

No Passengers Ask Refund of Passage Money and Several Are Ready To Try Again.

BY THOMAS T. TOPPING.
Associated Press Staff Correspondent.

Cuers, France, May 18.—(AP)—Dr. Hugo Eckener, after a day spent in careful examination of his crippled ship the Graf Zeppelin, left tonight for Friedrichshafen. He had made plans for putting the dirigible back into air service and had characterized as "absurd" reports that sabotage was responsible for the breakdown of four of the five motors on Thursday.

The dirigible commander has left to his staff the task of installing new motors, expected from Friedrichshafen. The airship is scheduled to leave early Monday or Tuesday morning for its home port where it will be completely overhauled. The start of the next attempt to fly to America has been tentatively set for June 20.

Thousands View Ship.

Before giving the craft into charge of others Dr. Eckener made a long survey of all of its parts in consultation with the Zeppelin expert Dimling, of Friedrichshafen. Whether this examination threw further light on the cause of the motor trouble was not made public, but Dr. Eckener was emphatic in saying the breakdowns were natural and accidental.

Thousands of automobiles poured into this little aviation village today, bringing French aviation experts as well as curious civilians to visit the Graf Zeppelin in her hangar.

"No one is barred," ruled Dr. Eckener. "I am so deeply appreciative of the assistance and welcome of the French at this untoward landing that I can take no exception to their seeing all they want of our craft.

Worn-Out Engines.

In ridiculing the idea of sabotage, Dr. Eckener said, "It is too silly a matter to be worth even a record or message. Please don't ask me anything about it again." Where could sabotage have taken place?"

The commander took advantage of discussion of the motor problem to recall that he had said at Friedrichshafen before the start that the air ship should carry eight motors instead of five.

"The motors were tired after her flight to America last year and to Palestine this year," he said, "but had we had eight instead of five they would not have failed. Dismissing all thought of sabotage, we felt that after two long trips the motors were nearing the end of their efficiency, but we believed they could stand another 10,000 miles. In that we made a mistake."

It was said that none of the passengers accepted the offer of the Zeppelin company to refund the $2,008 that each had paid for passage, including tax. Several of them already had left Toulon, and Mrs. Mary Pierce, the only woman passenger, and Commander Vincent Clarke, of the United States navy, will leave tomorrow. They had waited for the decision of Dr. Eckener as to whether the flight would be continued from here.

FRANCE WINS PRAISE OF GERMAN PRESS.

Berlin, May 18.—(AP)—The entire German press as well as the German foreign office tonight gratefully acknowledged their thanks for the promptitude of French assistance in aiding the dirigible Graf Zeppelin during the airship's perilous journey and emergency landing in France yesterday.

More had been accomplished towards a Franco-German rapprochement by the mishap to the Zeppelin and the efficient assistance which it called forth from the French than by years of diplomatic negotiations, it was widely remarked.

Dr. Eckener was given full credit for his remarkable presence of mind and circumspection in maneuvering the airship. But the ready French helpfulness has filled the mind of the man in the street and brought echoes from official circles. The Diplomatische Politische Korrespondenz, which reflects foreign office views, today unstintingly praised "the French humane spirit and broadmindedness and the French government's quickness of decision and ready response.

"Its officials are deserving of our heartfelt thanks."

Shut Off Power Lines.

Many newspapers noted that by their action the French had transferred to airships the ancient law of the sea which obliges ships on the high seas to hurry to one another's assistance in case of distress, irrespective of their destination, purpose or nationality.

That the French government on its own initiative had designated the naval base at Toulon as the safest available landing field for the imperiled Zeppelin, was described as "a fine illustration of humane reciprocity between nations, before which all other

Sky Climbers of Atlanta, 500 Strong, Visit Candler Field Saturday for Inspection of Municipal Airport Facilities

Here's a throng of Sky Climbers grouped about one of the big planes at Candler field. The picture was made Saturday at their outing, when they went on a thorough tour of inspection of the municipal airport.

The first outing of the Atlanta branch of Sky Climbers of America, a trip to Candler field, was enjoyed by over 500 Atlanta boys Saturday. Traveling in five double-decked busses and over 100 private cars, the boys arrived at the field early in the morning. In groups of 75 they were taken on a thorough inspection tour of the field by officials of Pitcairn Aviation, Inc., and were given a complete air circus, after which 20 boys took flights in a cabin monoplane or open planes according to their choice.

The boys were shown the control room from which all lights at the field are worked, including flood lights for night flying and landings; the air mail postoffice, through which thousands of pounds of mail are handled each month; the weather bureau office; the department of commerce office through which all government air regulations in this section are enforced, and the radio office, which keeps a record of all "ship" movements.

The boys were then taken to the Pitcairn hangars, where they were shown all items in connection with daily inspection, servicing and repairing of planes. The guides, all members of Pitcairn aviation staff, were kept busy answering questions, being assisted by D. F. Chase, chief Sky Climber.

The air circus put on by C. C. "Champ" Taliaferio was thrilling to the on-lookers, including slow and snap rolls, Immelmans, and fancy flying.

About forty more airplane views have been added to the club collection during the past week, and many more are expected shortly. The display includes pictures of practically all the better known models of planes.

Over 400 additional boys signed up last week and several hundred have been turned down on their applications due to lack of time to sign them up. The clubrooms are open from 10 a. m. to 5 p. m. each day, and 10 a. m. to 4 p. m. Saturday. The clubrooms will close at noon on May 25.

BANDIT BOUGHT PISTOL FROM PRISONER HERE

Harvey Tells Bibb Sheriff He Obtained Gun in Atlanta Jail.

Macon, Ga., May 18.—(AP)—Leland Harvey, youthful bandit now serving sentences aggregating 105 years, has written Sheriff James R. Hicks, of Bibb county that he paid $300 for a pistol and ammunition with which he made an unsuccessful attempt to gain freedom when removed from jail to the chaingang of Muscogee county.

Harvey who in his letter explained he wished to absolve Bibb jail officials of blame, nearly overpowered his guard while en route to the Muscogee gang, to begin his long sentence. The letter follows:

"Dear Mr. Hicks:

"To show my appreciation of the consideration that was shown me while in your jail, I am going to tell you where I got the pistol I had when I left there, so that you and Captain Tom McCommon and Joe Striplin will not be put in an embarrassing position.

Got Pistol Here.

"When Aubrey and I were sent to Atlanta I got it then. I paid $300 for it. There was a prisoner up there who asked us why we did not get one. We told him we had no way of getting one, and he offered to get one through a friend for the price mentioned.

"So you can let the people know that it was not carelessness on the part of any of your men that I got possession of it.

"Hoping that you do not feel that I broke my word to you about not giving you any trouble, if you would treat me decent while there, I remain

"Respectfully yours,

"Leland Harvey."

"P. S. Guess you notice that I didn't mention any name in telling you about the pistol. It's because I don't feel that it would help you to know it, and I had rather let those Atlanta people worry over it, as I don't like them anyhow."

Harvey was arrested in Miami, Fla., a few months ago after a successful escape from a Georgia prison camp and was returned here to answer several charges of banditry, and on conviction received a total of 105 years in sentences.

Simpler Curriculum, Taft

ZERO POINT IN SCHOLARSHIP REACHED, HE THINKS

Tells Fraternity, Needed

Washington, May 18.—(AP)—William Howard Taft, chief justice of the United States and former president, today told delegates to the convention of his college fraternity, Psi Upsilon, that in his opinion extra-curriculum duties were "carried to a great extreme" and that "we must get our public and private schools down to a simpler curriculum."

The jurist, who makes speeches only on rare occasions, joked with his audience which included Secretary of State Stimson, Senators Bingham, Goff, Moses, Sackett and Walcott, and others prominent in official circles. He struck a serious note on the "slump" in scholarship, however, explaining that "the war played havoc with a great many conceptions and we haven't gotten over it yet.

"There has been a good deal said about the low standard of scholarship shown in the comparative tables of college fraternities," he said, "and it really, to those who are deeply interested, is a source of the greatest anxiety. I was delighted to hear that the zero point had been reached and that we were going up on the other side. Certainly we ought to."

The chief justice observed that many students went to school "for social reasons" and sometimes "to establish themselves by reason of the fact that they are called college men."

Dreadful Waste.

Terming this situation a "dreadful waste," he added, "when a man grows as old as I have, he then feels like resorting to profanity as he ought not to do at the misconception of life and the use of education and the use of universities by these feather-headed young men that don't look ahead to know the opportunities they have and to appreciate those opportunities."

Speaking of "strange words" used in educational vocabulary most freely by "recent graduates of normal schools," he said, "I am very certain that were they called upon to define in any way by which anybody else could understand what they mean, there would be a stir in educational circles. The trouble now is the superficial nature of what we are trying to teach and we must get our public schools and our private schools down to a simpler curriculum so that when we know a thing we know it.

"I don't want to criticize athletics" or a "great many extra-curriculum duties," he added, "but I think there is a great deal of time and money wasted in those things which many of you most enjoy."

Educated 12,000,000 to "Beta."

Secretary Stimson, who was secretary of war in the cabinet of the ex-president, and later occupied the post of governor-general of the Philippines, which the chief justice once held, paid tribute to his former chief, saying, "he has educated 12,000,000 little brown brothers to love the name of the first Beta man they ever came in contact with.

"If that noble experiment in self-government and democracy which our country is carrying on the other side of the Pacific carries out the hopes we have for it," he said, "it will be due, more than to any other cause, to the example and the labors of our guest of honor today."

WESLEYAN LIBRARIAN GETS CARNEGIE AWARD

Miss Katherine P. Carnes, member of one of the oldest families of Macon, and librarian at Wesleyan college, is one of eight persons to receive scholarships from the Carnegie Corporation of New York during the week. The honor carries with it $1,500 and provides for a year's graduate work in college library problems in the department of library science at the University of Michigan.

MISS KATHERINE P. CARNES.

Miss Carnes has always lived in Macon. She is a granddaughter of Captain W. W. Carnes, now residing in Bradenton, Fla., who for many years was captain of the Macon Volunteers, Macon's oldest military organization.

She graduated from Wesleyan college in 1913, receiving her bachelor of arts degree. The following year she studied in the Carnegie library school in Atlanta where she received a diploma. Since 1919 she has been librarian at Wesleyan college.

Wesleyan Will Unveil Picture Of Mrs. Candler

Macon, May 18.—(AP)—A portrait of Mrs. Martha Beall Candler, mother of Bishop Warren A. Candler, Judge John S. Candler and the late Asa G. Candler, will be unveiled in the Candler memorial library at Wesleyan college Thursday of next week.

The portrait is by Miss Margaret Fitzhugh Browne and will be placed in the hall of the library, a gift to the college as a memorial to Mrs. Candler.

Mrs. Sam J. Guy, daughter of Judge Candler, will present the portrait to the college, while Dr. W. F. Quillian, president of the college, will accept it for the institution. Two of Judge Candler's granddaughters, Florrie Margaret Guy and Margaret Louise Candler, will unveil the painting.

Dalton News To Become Daily Paper

Dalton, Ga., May 18.—(Special.)—Following completion of negotiations that have been under way for some time, whereby T. E. Edwards, former publisher of the Rome News-Tribune, purchased an interest in the Dalton News Publishing Company, announcement is made that the News, now a weekly, will become a daily newspaper within the next few months, and that the present plant will be greatly increased.

The date on which the News will desert the weekly field for that of the daily has not been decided. The present organization will be kept intact: Van F. Kettles will remain as president, W. Gordon Kettles as advertising manager, and R. E. Hamilton as editor. Mr. Edwards will become publisher of the newspaper, and Mr. Kettles will direct the commercial printing department, which will be enlarged.

"After looking over Alabama and Georgia newspaper fields, I decided that Dalton offered the best opening for a daily newspaper to be found in this section," Mr. Edmards said. He spent considerable time investigating the opportunities in this and other cities before choosing Dalton.

Dalton, probably the largest city in the state not having a daily newspaper, will become the second in the seventh district with daily local newspaper service. Rome at present has the only one in this district.

Sinclair One Of the Boys, Jail Warden Says

Washington, May 18.—(United News.)—Twelve days ago Harry F. Sinclair, multimillionaire oil baron and sportsman, stumbled out of his costly limousine and into a cell in the District jail here, amid booming flashlights and much excitement. Today he had sunk into the oblivion precipitated by prison bars.

In the first few days of his imprisonment Sinclair, who is serving 90 days for contempt of the senate growing out of the Teapot Dome case, received many letters. Numerous persons came to visit him. Now he gets only an occasional business letter and has virtually no callers, according to Major Peak, superintendent of the jail.

"He acts so like other prisoners that I hardly ever notice him," Peak said. "In fact, I hardly ever see him except once in a while in the dining room or office."

Gets Into Routine.

Sinclair, he said, is fitting neatly into the routine of the jail, where he has been given the job of pharmacist.

The wealthy prisoner is healthy. Today at lunch he ate a generous helping of spinach, three slices of bread and a large piece of corned beef.

Sinclair's lawyer calls every other day, a privilege allowed all prisoners. Peak said the oil man had asked no especial favors since the doors of the jail had shut behind him.

The first statement Sinclair has made since he was imprisoned was issued today in answer to a question concerning press dispatches that his wife had suffered a nervous collapse and had been sent to a Michigan sanitarium.

In Sanitarium.

"Mrs. Sinclair is in the Battle Creek sanitarium," he wrote on a piece of paper.

A young newspaper reporter contrived to be jailed on a minor charge with a view of obtaining an interview with Sinclair. When jail officials learned he was a newspaperman he was transferred to the workhouse at Occoquan to complete the rest of his 10-day sentence.

Sinclair will be permitted to receive callers tomorrow at the regular visitors' hours, between 7 and 8 p. m.

We anticipate no trouble anywhere although some of small sections at the mouth of the old river, south of Vidalia, La., where new levees have not been completed are being watched closely," Major Holcombe added.

"We have barges and equipment ready to strengthen the old levees in this section, however, should any emergency arise."

JOIN UP THE PATCHES.

The map graphically showing the paved roads in Georgia, which is reproduced from the official map of the highway department, is one to arouse protests from intelligent citizens in all parts of the state.

The only highways that are paved from state-line to state-line are the short line from Augusta to Folkston on the Florida line and the Coastal Highway, built by a special bonded district from Savannah to the Florida line.

There is no main paved route from the north line of the state to the south line, nor from the east line of the state to the west-line. But there are scattered patches of paved road quite enough in mileage to have given, long ago, two splendid and profitable trunk lines through the state, north to south and east to west.

Instead, the miserable and ineffective policy of partnershipping with county road projects and placating local politicians has been pursued for ten years, millions of highway funds thus improvidently used, and the whole product is visible to the naked eye in the jig-puzzle map which we reproduce today.

It will butter none of our public parsnips now to complain of what is past. The common gumption duty of the day is to redeem the time lost and the money illy-applied in the decade past by legislating this summer to accomplish those imperative ends.

The governor of the state, the new highway chairman, the highway survey commission appointed by the governor, the press, and the people of the state in general, are daily demanding a revised, coherent and comprehensive, and adequately financed, highway system.

They want main through thoroughfares and they want the paved patches connected up with them to make them serviceable and valuable and economical.

The work demanded should be done as speedily as modern methods can do it.

It should be done now and not in 1950 or the year 2000!

Because the roads are dry and passable in summer is no argument for delay and no compensation for their being impassable bogs during much of the year.

The people of the state are losers by millions of dollars every year because of the lack of hard roads—the proved savings, economies in service, and profits from them to agriculture and commerce.

Those enormous losses should be stopped!

THE GRAYS IN REUNION.

As many of the aged veterans of the Confederacy as can will gather at Charlotte in North Carolina, in the first week of June, for another annual reunion. To many of them it will be the last. The gray line is growing thinner and shorter every twelve months.

But there is both heroism and pathos as the old southern warriors pass in review before the worshipful eyes of their children and grand children. There is no apology in their eyes and no shame upon their countenances. They went forth to battle in that long ago with clear consciences and they accepted the failure of their cause with no sense of turpitude or treason.

As they "pass over the river" to join their immortal commanders on "fame's eternal camping ground," they go with undimmed honor, with the fadeless love of their kindred, with the respect of all men everywhere who respect honor, faith and fortitude.

There will be millions of devout aspirations throughout Dixie, while the good, gray heroes are gathered at Charlotte, that a kindly Providence will safeguard them, rejoice their spirits and savor the remainder of their days with sweet memories of their reunion of 1929 in the hospitable Old North State.

THE LAW SCHOOL BUILDING.

The University of Georgia, parent of all of its order in the Union, is to have provided for its law department, which is second in competency to none, a building on the campus, of adequacy to its needs and of dignity equal to its fame.

Two years ago the Georgia Bar Association proposed to the university trustees that if they would put the law school upon a Class A footing the association would raise $75,000 for the erection of the needed new law school building. Since then it has been decided to increase the building fund to $100,000.

The trustees have done their part and Judge William H. Barrett as president of the alumni association, at the time the offer was made and accepted, appointed a complement of able lawyers of the state bar association as committeemen to complete the fund for the law school building. Already they are assembling subscriptions from lawyers and others who are interested in the efficiency and fame of our university's law department.

The happiest feature of this enterprise is the concensus of all concerned that the building to be erected shall bear the name of "the most outstanding loyal alumnus of the present generation" and that he who fully fills the picture is Harold Hirsch, a leading lawyer of Atlanta, Georgia and the nation, who has been unstintedly devoted and liberal to his alma mater since she graduated him.

Members of the bar of Atlanta and friends of Harold Hirsch have pledged that they will raise half of the $100,000 needed for the new law building, leaving only the other half to be subscribed by other lawyers and friends throughout the state.

So greatly is the building needed for the enlarged functioning of the law school, and so desirable is it to put the institution equal footed with the other law schools of the country, that it would be humiliating to even think that the able and well-conditioned lawyers of the state will hesitate in closing up the subscription list quickly.

It will be a credit to the bar of the state to be the giver of the needed edifice and a credit as well to every lawyer of Georgia to have it dedicated to the honor and bear the name of a colleague whose career and unselfish services to the profession and the university have marked him as an exemplar of whom they are justly proud.

Elsewhere in The Constitution appear the details of the movement and we commend them to the quick co-operation of all who should be generously concerned with them.

THE CHURCH AND STATE.

When so eminent a churchman as the bishop of Washington feels an urge to protest against any taking of the church into politics as an entity and active force, the occasion is important. Bishop Freeman is not a reactionary, a sensationalist, a partisan, but a priest with wide contacts with current life and its relations to personal and public morals.

He officiates in that diocese where the general government functions and where the politicians and their interactions are most in evidence. His observations there move him to judge and declare that the maintenance of lobbies by religionists, seeking to coerce or dictate national legislation "is utterly foreign to a right conception of the church's function."

Washington city is a seething mass of lobbies representing half a thousand special interest, ranging from protection of canned tomatoes to the acquisition of the vast water powers of the nation. Some of the most conspicuous and active of the lobbies are boldly concerned with legislation affecting religion and morals, such as prohibition, Sunday laws, moving picture censorship, etc. So persistent and offensive do some of these zealots become that senators and representatives are forced to forbid them to visit their offices and homes.

Bishop Freeman rightly warns that the church loses prestige and power whenever it undertakes by organized methods to influence, direct and control the political action of a government. "The page of history," he declares, "discloses the sad and tragic story of confusion and discord where church and state have been in conflict," and he might have added that the same results follow where church and state have been in concert.

When men and women go to church to restore or increase their spiritual relations with God they want to leave politics and all its incidents outside the door. They are seeking the gospel of "peace on earth, good will among men," and not the prejudices of partisans, the controversies of political doctrinaires, and the fights of factions to dictate and control the rights of men.

There is a stern and general call in this era of our national life to keep rigidly separated the functions of church and state. In the fields of spiritual ethics and personal morals let the church function with all its enthusiasm and efficiency and no one will complain of its zeal and activities. But in the broad and complex field of politics, where the purely mental and material interests of men play with the full powers of passion, there is no place for the purposes and functions of a spiritual church.

OUR UNREPRESENTATIVES.

The federal senate has now taken up a bill to provide for the national census of 1930 and upon the basis of it to reapportion the membership of the house of representatives, retaining its present number.

Being in the senate the bill is, of course, the subject of a running fire of criticisms and quibbles. No bill, other than a salary increase bill, ever gets through the senate without a scrap and a general round of wind jamming.

The membership of the house was due to be recast not later than 1922 on the basis of the census of 1920, but congress has ever since refused to perform its constitutional mandate, and the house now, formed on the census of 1910, leaves over 30,000,000 of the population without due constitutional representation. That condition is a shameful one to the congress of the nation.

Now, objection is made to the senate first acting upon reapportionment because it relates wholly to the membership of the house. The objection is a silly one, for the senate is equally charged to make the apportionment, and the house is not compelled to accept whatever the senate provides.

The bill should be pushed through to enactment as speedily as circumstances permit and the future houses of congress be put and kept upon an honest constitutional basis.

AN HONOR WELL GIVEN.

The naming of the new 100,000-horsepower steam electric generating plant on the nearby Chattahoochee river as the "Atkinson Steam Plant" is a deserved and happy recognition of the worth of Henry Morrill Atkinson to the cultural and industrial progress of the city and the state.

Without dissent Mr. Atkinson is acclaimed by his fellow-citizens as a leader of peculiar intelligence and enterprise. He has long identified his abilities and his fortune with those public undertakings which contribute to the esthetic, the educational, the civic and the industrial progress of the community. He has done so with a spirit of consecration and liberality that has impressed the people and brought to him the general esteem which he enjoys.

Mr. Atkinson brought electric lights and power to Atlanta and inaugurated the line of power developments which has done so much to put a great congeries of Georgia enterprises in touch and tune with this electrical age. His sympathies overextend the arithmetic of corporation profits and embrace the benefactions which discovery, inventions and arts bring within the reach and enjoyment of society at large. Hence the rich appropriateness of naming the Atkinson Steam Plant.

BRENAU'S FIFTY YEARS.

Brenau college, at Gainesville, is to celebrate its semi-centennial with an elaborate program covering the days from May 29 to June 3. The occasion will be one of the red letter educational events of the state's history.

The genesis and history of Brenau constitute a veritable romance of educational devotion and persistent endeavor. Today the extensive and competent institution stands out as a splendid monument to the cultural aspirations and achievements of Georgia educators. Its equipment and accomplishments, its alumna and their works, have given to the college a fame that has gone beyond the state and become an illuminated chapter in the educational annals of the nation.

Three emphasized features of Brenau's work have given to it unusual distinction. They are the cultures of the pallette and plastic arts, clasic music and expressive oratory. Institutions elsewhere accentuate one or other of those highly valuable branches of personal accomplishment, but Brenau has cultured all in famous degrees.

All Georgians will be clamant in praise of the 50-year record of Brenau on the semi-centennial occasion and feel a pleasing confidence in the long continuance of its great career and noble services.

A RETURN OF ORATORY.

Encouraging signs are seen in all sections of the country that the growing generation is giving serious and studious attention to the art of public speaking.

Leading newspapers of the country, among which The Constitution is included, have for some years past, promoted local, state and sectional oratorical contests among school boys and girls, ending with the annual international contest at Washington city. These contests have engaged more than a million ambitious young people to sedulously cultivate their powers of thinking and of public expression.

The effects of the years of contests are beginning to be observable in our public life. The new oratory is not of the old effleurant, stilted and and Addisonian order, it is true, and is all the better for not being so. It is more intellectual level, direct and determinant; more practical and popular in efficiency.

The oratory in congress is not so colorful as was that of Clay and Webster and Sumner and Ben Hill, but it is equally cogent and more constructive. The oratory of the modern pulpit is not as spiritually flaming as was that of Bascom and Beecher and Pierce, but it is as morally penetrating and often more practical as to ethics and the relations of religion with daily living.

The oratory of business, while more technical than rhetorical, is even more educative and effective than the old time agricultural peans and the commercial congratulations of the days before the interstates war of the '60s.

The Rotarians, Kiwanians and all the other national and international associations of the active men of affairs hold weekly tournaments, so to call them, of oratorical efforts by their members and guests. Their meetings have developed a far-flung field of "fellows who know how to put it across" by intelligent and forceful speech.

After all, the human voice is the greatest and yet the most effective organ by which thoughts, ideas, principles and performances are stimulated and spread among mankind. Other methods of reaching, teaching and directing human action are ancillary to it. The God who made the voice and taught it speech gave it its leadership in education, propagation and the propulsion of the race along the highways of progress. And to no nation will a strong revival of the powers of speech be more profitable than to the people of this republic.

NO WREATH IS DUE.

The Courier-Journal, of Louisville, with a tang of the Henry Watterson frankness, insists that Senator Robinson's "victory" in lining-up the senate democrats to slam the president by voting the debentures into the farm relief bill is a very questionable democratic triumph. The C.-J. is not at all disposed to contribute a victor's wreath for the brow of the democratic leader in the senate.

In other words, the Louisville democratic organ believes with a great host of democrats that voting for what you don't want and getting it is emphatically a Pyrrhic victory, better lost than won.

From whatever political angle the action of the senate democrats is viewed, saving that of personal advantage to each one with his home state constituents, it looks to have been a useless coalition with a bunch of republican insurgents who have never helped a democratic cause and never will. Those swashbucklers are trying to crash the gates of the White House and demand the surrender of the president to their appeal for what the democratic party has always stalwartly stood against—a class subsidy levied upon the taxes of the people at large.

And then we are told by a wise acre from London that if a woman's nose is slightly crooked and inclines towards the left she is likely to become the mother of sons, but if it turns towards the right it is more possible she will bear daughters. Nothing is said about the noses of the patricians which turn upward.

The Splendid Opportunity for Generating Genuine Georgia Statecraft.

The best informed political and economic authorities of the country have pronounced Georgia to be right now unexceeded as a field for industrial and big business enterprises.

It is only the old fogyism of the mass of the state's citizenship that clogs the rapid and profitable development of the abundant resources, labor and commercial facilities of the commonwealth.

The trouble does not inhere in a prevalent ignorance of our population. Only one in twenty of the adult whites of the state are illiterates and it is the adult white people who control and determine the popular psychology and political conduct of the state. While less than a third of our 42 per cent of negro inhabitants are illiterates, they are electoral incompetents for other properly legal reasons.

Searching, therefore, for the reason why the governing element in Georgia is so backward in philosophy and progressiveness, it is found in the weakness and cheapness of leadership among them.

* * * *

Statecraft Is In Low Gear.

It is not only pitiable, but lamentable, that there is not visible within the state's horizon a half-dozen men who fill out the major measurements of a modern statecraftsman.

If there are so many qualified and who are willing to stand up and fight with brave and unselfish souls for the common welfare and advancement of the state—in God's name, tell the people who they are?

We had a general assembly in session at the state capitol for 60 days two years ago, and there is left no memory of as many as five men among the 258 who exhibited to the people any symptom of sane and constructive statesmanship.

What act of legislation, uplifting to the state's efficiency and generally helpful to the people, testifies to the wisdom and progressive spirit of that large and costly mass meeting?

This is no tirade against them—no waste of disappointment and belated criticism. Not at all. It is the simple statement of the judgment of sensible and sincere citizens all over the state, who observed the actions of the legislators and who deplore their manifest inefficiency.

* * * *

The Offers To Statesmanship.

The opportunities for men of brains and courage to practice genuine statesmanship were never more wide open anywhere than they are in Georgia in this year of our Lord, 1929.

First of all, there is an urgent need for the reformation of the state's judicial system. The better administration of justice, the enforcement of the laws to protect life, homes and families, property and public order, all demand it. A sane report on the needed reforms will be made by a commission of able citizens, and the people will hope that there are men in the next legislature with the spirit and power to enact those reforms over whatever protests may be bawled against them.

Then, there is the big highways duty—a plain duty to provide a plenary and permanent state-wide system and finance it to the full limit, ending the futile and farcical pay-as-you-go mesalliances of the past 10 years.

On the agenda, also, is the establishment of a modern public school system, reaching every available child in the state and opening the way to it up to and through the university schools.

Here, to name no others, are three things urgently needed by the state and worthy the most devoted labors of every man who claims statecraft and patriotism.

* * * *

Arouse the Folks Back Home.

There is need for widespread propaganda among "the folks back home" in every county to convince them that they should instruct their representatives to stand forth and be counted for these great state advancements.

The county newspapers, the taxpaying citizens, the producers who need economic transport and accessible markets, the school teachers, and the mothers of the children, are all needed to impress upon their legislator that he must drop his nonsense and demagogy, and support the public welfare.

The condition of the state calls for the best intelligence and courage of enterprise that can be applied to its betterment, but the people must become active and insistent for what they need before the low-grade politicians will act for their relief.

What we want from the next general assembly is a splendid exhibition of business sense and constructive legislative ability. Give us those things and we will show the world a Georgia that is a Golconda of wealth and power!

Pearls and Personalities

The greatest of all story-tellers, in one of His shortest stories, told of a merchant whose business it was to buy pearls. One day he came across a pearl of such great value that he sold all the rest he had and bought it. The reason that the story has lived is because it is a story of life. We are all like the merchant, "seeking goodly pearls." That is, we are seeking what we think are of great value. Just here we find the fundamental difference in personalities. We differ in what we think are pearls, or in what we think are the true values of life.

The Spiritual Dynamo.

If you know what a man considers "the pearl of great price," you will know pretty much what the man it. Here is the root of personality—the dominant want of one's life. Here is the driving power of the man. The things that we do and say, our planning and purposing, our efforts and strivings, are all determined by our wants.

Modern education is coming to understand this principle as vital in the development of character. Instead of trying to force a child along certain lines by bribery or threats, the wise teacher or parent will seek to play some part in determining what the child shall want. There lie latent in the undeveloped personality a vast variety of possible desires, which may be awakened into ambitions and aspirations. The issue always is, what will he consider to be pearls? We should remember that the things which are made attractive to the growing child are the things which are to determine his search, direct his endeavor, and thus point the pathway of his personality in after years.

It is intensely interesting to look within one's own personality at almost any given moment, and recognize the number and variety of his wants. If he will listen to his own spirit, he will hear a medley of voices of appetites, tastes and ambitions, clamoring to be satisfied. If he should form the habit of looking within from time to time, he will find that the tendency is for someone to grow stronger and stronger, at the expense of all the other desires. Some appetite, taste or ambition, is growing more and more attractive. He is on the eve of finding his "pearl of great price." It means that some one desire is to be the master of his spirit. This is the crisis in character building, because when one finds what he considers to be "the pearl of great price," he has found that for which he will sacrifice or subordinate every other desire.

The Great Price.

Satisfying any one of our physical appetites is not wrong in itself, but to allow any one to become supreme and master of all the rest, is deadly to the development of character. We call a man a "glutton" who seems to live to eat. He is a man whose appetite for food has become supreme, so that in order to eat, he will sacrifice every other value of life. Just here is the tragedy of the victim of the appetite of drink. The desire for alcoholic stimulate has grown from a casual physical appetite, to become so strong that he sacrifies health, commercial prosperity, friends, family and all of those intangible values which go to make up spiritual wealth.

There is an insistent demand today from a certain school of psychology, most blatant in current fiction, for absolute freedom in the satisfaction of the appetites, for the purpose of "self-realization." But can there be anything like the realization of the self, which can and ought to be, unless there is the opportunity for the free expression of all the possible powers of the personality? If some appetite of the body gains the mastery, all other appetites and aspirations become subservient to it, and only those faculties and forces, needed for the satisfaction of that appetite, ever find expression. It is for this reason that we find in so much of our modern fiction, life portrayed with the sex passion dominant. All other desires, tastes and aspirations are subservient to this master motive. These stories are far from being pictures of freedom. They are tragedies, revealing, sometimes in vivid pathos, the spirits of men imprisoned within their bodies.

After all, this dominant want of a man is his ideal of life. It is his faith in the best kind of life to live. It will summon out of the mystery of his personality those faculties, which will match the ambition of his heart. He will come to be the thing he wants most.

Jesus, who told this story of the pearls, taught that "the pearl of great price" is the life of service. Whether a man is an artist or an engineer, statesman or mechanic, merchant or poet, there is only one desire which he can afford to allow to become master of his life. That is the desire to serve others. When that becomes the intelligent passion of his spirit, it will summon every possible faculty of his personality into free and full expression.

NEW YORK SKYLINES

BY CHARLES ESTCOURT, JR.

(Written Exclusively for The Constitution and North American Newspaper Alliance.)

New York, May 18.—Ran across Dr. W. E. Biederwolf, the evangelist, in Fifty-seventh street. Last saw him 17 years ago. Then he was in his physical prime, preaching severe and yet kindly gospel in a large pine tabernacle. Today he is a little stooped, a little grayer, but his face is fully as strong, his gray eyes can still burn, and his smile remains tender.

Now, in New York, which he likes, he is closing a series of meetings in Dr. John Roach Straton's church, and then he will go to a national Presbyterian convention. Finally he travels to Winona Lake, Ind., where for many summers he has conducted open-air religious activities.

In 17 years Dr. Biederwolf has been around the world three times and has had charge of a thousand lepers who live in a hospital he has founded on the peninsula of Korea. They call it "heaven." So this evangelist is possibly the only one who can get testimonials from a thousand souls that his preaching started them to "heaven." It is by his preaching appeals that he raised the funds.

Dr. Biederwolf must be one of the few Americans who have seen a lepers' track meet. He saw a race between two lepers without hands who carried on their backs other lepers without feet.

In two years the horses used to deliver Manhattan's mail have decreased from 1,300 to 150, and the figure may keep on falling, yet the postal authorities favor the continued use of a few horses at least.

They are said to be more economical than motor trucks in the downtown commercial district of tremendous mails and short hauls. The horses in the mail service do not belong to the government but to a trucking company, which has the contract.

The proportion of mail actually wasted, wasteful and superfluous must be getting higher than the proportion of telephone calls and conversations similarly unnecessary. Every settled resident with a telephone, business connection and bank account now gets an absurd quantity of circulars, advertisements, bulletins of all kinds. A college man, a graduate of no matter how long ago, is invited to join clubs and subscribe. A man who has been once to Europe receives offers of the best credit facilities. And certain clothing concerns show an affection for a one-time customer that is almost embarrassing.

A Noisy Noise Annoys.

Technicians who are members of a new scientific society for the study of acoustics met here in the telephone company laboratory, a big yellow building on the Hudson river, guarded at all entrances, and discussed their subject as it relates to music, architecture and annoyance to the nervous system.

One man has found that pitch, as well as volume, is accountable for such annoyance. Another exhibited a group of clay heads and necks he had fashioned most carefully, giving them the same apparatus for making sounds that the human neck contains. Yet when he blew air from them they remained altogether mute. It was assumed that the clay of which these dummies consisted must be no good as a medium for sound.

Getting an Education.

Professors at Columbia university and other large schools in and near New York say the presence of men and women of middle age earnestly and eagerly studying for the joy of it has an excellent influence upon the boys and girls in their late teens and early twenties who are going through the regular college courses.

The older students, some forsaking their paths of livelihood awhile to absorb knowledge of subjects quite unrelated to their vocations may be considered peculiar, but their enthusiasm for knowledge is catching.

Professor David Snedden, department of education, Columbia, says that if a diagnostician on human needs in the way of learning should drop down from Mars he probably would report that few persons between 20 and 30 need to learn any more spelling, and few would be apt to take up languages, higher mathematics or music, with any profit, in a material way. But interested self-education in any field of science and culture would still be thoroughly worth while.

"If our Martian knows his business," says Professor Snedden, "he will warn against the man who insists that whatever you learn you should learn thoroughly. Nonsense; only a few things are good enough to be learned thoroughly. For some purposes superficial learnings are fully as valuable as thorough learnings—except, of course, for their insidious effects in making us think that all superficial learnings are good enough always.

Marble Hill and River Mud.

In a section called Marble Hill, just across the Harlem river, is a brick building containing about a dozen store rooms which seems to be literally splitting in two, although it has been up only two years. It was built on filled-in land, and has been slowly sinking at the corners. One theory is that Broadway, which it faces, is pushing it over backward. Another, the more reasonable, is that the corner on the other side from Broadway has given way and is pulling the building over with it.

Diagonally across the cellar floor runs a crack which continues zig-zag up the walls and through part of the ceilings. On one side the building is supported by a heavy underpinning of oak timbers, and except for this the building would have been down long ago.

This structure is the worst example of what has happened before on Manhattan's "weak spot," for this land is Manhattan, although few residents of the city know that. Almost everybody believes the Harlem river is the fixed boundary line between Manhattan and the Bronx. It is, except for Marble Hill.

Formerly the river curved around to the north of this section. The channel was changed but the boundary line was not. So this section, which in a geographical way appears to be in the Bronx, is politically in Manhattan. Unlike the rest of Manhattan, it rests on a river bed gone dry.

The Background of Foreign Affairs

Tariff Effects Abroad; Snowden's Call for "Repudiation;" Immigration by Qualification; Mexico Takes Next Step.

BY HENRY KITTREDGE NORTON.

(Copyright, 1929, for The Atlanta Constitution.)

Doubtless the making of a tariff is a domestic affair. But some of the effects of it are foreign affairs. It would be worth little as a protective tariff if it did not have effects on foreign exporters.

Now that the United States has become both the world's greatest market and the world's greatest competitor, many countries are watching with anxious eyes the progress of the tariff debate in Washington. Whose trade is going to be hit, and how hard? If it is ours, how can we retaliate?

These and similar questions are heard in all directions. Cuba is concerned over her sugar. Argentina fears for her wheat and her beef. Canada has similar tremors. France wonders what is to become of the promise made to her for some improvement in her exports, in the face of a general increase in duties. Germany despairs of a market for her products which will enable her to pay reparations. Geneva, with her internationally expressed desire for freer trade conditions, is in a blue funk over the whole business.

What are we going to do about it? Nothing.

Economists have told us for years that free trade would be to the general interest of the people of the United States, that protectionism was a costly, uneconomic policy. But there have always been enough people who could see an advantage for themselves in a protective tariff to carry congress with them. And the present prosperity of this country seems an irrefutable proof of the validity of their arguments. Even the democratic party has come over to protectionism.

It is not likely that the demand for protection, having ignored domestic objections for upward of a century, will bow before foreign complaints. What industry in a position to gain from an increased tariff is going to withdraw its demand because Cubans or Argentinians or Canadians or Germans or all of them put together object? The gospel of free trade is but a voice crying in the wilderness. Protectionism is dominant—not only in the United States, but in most of the countries where protests are heard against a new tariff here. It will remain so as long as it works. If it falls it will be of its own weight, not from the attacks of economic theory.

Philip Snowden, chancellor of the exchequer in the labor cabinet, projected himself into the world's news by suggesting a "repudiation" of the Balfour doctrine on interallied debts. The word "repudiation" is so closely associated with Bolshevik Russia in the public mind and Mr. Snowden's party is so often referred to as a socialist party that there was a tendency to jump to the conclusion that the former chancellor was suggesting the repudiation of the debt to America.

Mr. Snowden happens to be both an intelligent man and a financier. He had no idea of repudiating the debt. What he suggested repudiating was the Balfour principle that England would not collect from the continent more than she had to pay to the United States.

Ever since Mr. Churchill told the house last year that the payments from the continent would about balance the payments to America there has been a sneaking feeling in England that perhaps Mr. Balfour overplayed his hand, that in his eagerness to put America in a hole on the debt question he threw away not worthless claims, but some very substantial assets. If the continent in the short space of six years could pay enough to cover the British payments to this country, there is ground for believing that in time it might be able to pay more and that Britain could have collected something on her own loans.

Mr. Balfour's awkward note prevents any such desired consummation. Hence the irritation of Mr. Snowden and those who sympathize with his protest against it. If the note stood alone as a mere declaration of British policy, it might be possible to "repudiate" the note and change the policy. But this policy has been given effect in the various settlements which England has made with her debtors. Repudiating these is a much more serious matter. It would upset the whole structure of post-war financial settlements. England has little to gain from such a course.

Immigration is another subject which is placed in the category of domestic affairs and yet has marked effects abroad. No nation has questioned the right of the United States to pass its exclusion laws, but several have protested against their methods or their results. The proposed change from quotas based upon a selected census to quotas based upon national origins will hardly affect the attitude of Japan or other protesting nations.

Assistant Secretary of Labor Husband has set forth the "ideal basis" for immigration restriction. He would admit immigrants who possess qualifications to pursue a vocation for which an economic demand exists in the United States.

Passing for the moment the "practical" aspects of the matter, it must be conceded that this plan has much to recommend it over any quota scheme. In the first place, there is no discrimination of any kind against any country. Whether an applicant was a Canadian or a Japanese, a Swede or a Cambodian would of itself make no difference. He would be admitted if he were able to contribute to the economic development of this country. If he were not, he would be denied admission. The point might be made that it would be well to consider the cultural and political contribution of the applicant also, but the suggestion would not exclude that.

On the practical side, there would be serious problems. Somebody would have to judge these various qualifications on the part of immigrants. There might be doubt as to the competency of the present immigration service for the task of selecting the future citizenry of this country. And what a glorious opportunity for political influence!

The president of Mexico, now that the latest rebellion has evacuated across the northern border, has turned his attention to the church question. Its solution may prove more difficult than the suppression of the revolt.

Not the least factor in the government's victory over the rebel generals was the prompt and effective support of the United States. The church matter is purely domestic, and therefore not one in which Washington can take a hand. Not so with Mr. Morrow. It is common report that he has deeply interested himself in the quarrel between the Mexican government and the clergy. Not as ambassador. That would be inexcusable meddling. But as a man who has won the confidence of both sides by his fairness and disinterestedness. Both sides have sought his counsel and he has missed no opportunity to bring them closer together.

An important development has been the entrance of the Vatican into the discussions. The Mexican clergy is too deeply involved, too conscious of the loss of its former privileges, too fearful lest it lose its old power, to see the matter in the light of statesmanship. Rome has a cooler head and a longer view. Cardinal Gasparri as papal secretary of state has reserved similar problems in Czechoslovakia and other states of central Europe. Still more recently he has helped to find a satisfactory solution of the problem of the relation between the Vatican and Italy itself. Working with men of good will on this side of the Atlantic, he might well crown a distinguished career by making a new concordat with Mexico.

EVERY DAY QUESTIONS

By DR. S. PARKES CADMAN

Somerville, Mass.

Will you kindly state what are the fundamental doctrines of the Anglo-Catholic of Great Britain and suggest several authoritative books which explain their position sympathetically?

Anglo-Catholicism as a movement began with the Tractarians of Oxford, in the early nineteenth century. They asserted the fundamental separateness of church and state and emphatically repudiated the connection established between them by King Henry VIII. In the famous Tract "Number Ninety," written by Cardinal John Henry Newman, he contended that the Thirty-Nine Articles of Religion should be interpreted "in the sense of the Catholic church" and not according to the then accepted meanings or the intent of their authors. But Newman later felt that his argument was unsound and in the interests of consistency he entered the Church of Rome, which he declared to be the only Catholic church.

His conversion was a staggering blow to the Tractarians, but it did not justify the suspicions of their opponents that the Oxford movement was a conspiracy in favor of the holy see. The present prayer book controversy in England shows how intense are the convictions of both sides.

Advanced Anglo-Catholics teach baptismal regeneration, transubstantiation, the eucharistic sacrifice of the mass, the rights of sacerdotalism and the invocation of saints and fasting as indispensable doctrines for the valid and authoritative worship and ministry of the church.

These issues are discussed at length in my book, "The Three Religious Leaders of Oxford and Their Movements;" "The Anglo-Catholic Faith," by Canon T. A. Lacey, is also a recent and available treatment of the entire question. If you cannot get it, read Dean Richard William Church on the Oxford movement. It is a reverent, devout and dispassionate survey by a master in Israel.

Work Will Start at Once On New Airplane Factory To Be Built at Local Field

Robert Gregg Is President of Aircraft Company To Build 8-Place Tri-Motored Ships.

Plans for the construction of an airplane factory to build tri-motored, eight-passenger planes at Candler field were announced Saturday by officials of the recently-organized Atlanta Aircraft Corporation.

Work on the new factory at Candler field will be started at once, it was announced. It is hoped that it will be completed within two months, after which construction of the first planes will be started with a view of turning out the first product within eight months.

Simultaneous with the announcement of its activities the company made public a list of its officers and board of directors. Robert Gregg is president; George H. Prudden is vice president, and Edward Whitehead, vice president and secretary, with Mr. Gregg also acting as treasurer. The directorate is composed of the officers, C. Howard Candler, N. B. Whitcomb, S. Candler Dobbs, Jr., Henry C. Heinz, Winship Nunnally and N. Baxter Maddox.

Capital Subscribed.

Capital stock totaling $300,000 already has been subscribed and articles of incorporation under the laws of Georgia filed.

"The company was organized by a group of individuals who have the interest of Atlanta and Georgia at heart and want to put the city and state on the air map," the announcement of Mr. Prudden and Mr. Whitehead Saturday said. "The backers of this company are not in it for the monetary gain but to see that Atlanta and Georgia are given their rightful places in the world of aeronautics."

The corporation will build a tri-motored all-metal low-wing monoplane, eight-place. The plane will have three Wright Whirlwind 5-cylinder engines, developing 165 horsepower each, or three Wright Whirlwind 7-cylinder engines developing 225 horsepower each. This plane is beautiful in its streamlining, having a commodious cabin with comfortable upholstered chairs, and washroom adjoining. It will carry the latest safety devices, radio and telephone conections. The plane attains a top speed of 135 miles per hour or 155 miles per hour according to power plant. This plane will fill a much needed place in the scheme of aviation inasmuch as it has three motors and is all-metal, bringing the factor of safety up to a high degree and enabling transport companies to use all-metal tri-motored ships at a low cost to themselves and to satisfy the demand of the public for it.

Has Wide Experience.

Mr. Prudden, who as vice president, will be director of engineering and production, is an aeronautical engineer of note, and is said to be the father of all-metal aircraft design in this country. His air experience is said to cover a period of 18 years—from 1911 to 1929.

He built and flew two Chanute Gliders in 1911, and a year later built and flew a triplane glider. He became interested in the organization of aero clubs the following year, and from then until the war spent his time in that activity. At the outbreak of the war he enlisted in the flying corps, was later commissioned and earned an enviable record as a flier.

Following the war Mr. Prudden became associated with the Stout Metal Airplane Company, was its chief designer and soon became known as a leader in the industry. When the Stout organization was sold to the Ford Motor Company Mr. Prudden also sold his interest to Ford and retired to California. Later he organized the Prudden-San Diego Airplane Company and for a time was its managing director.

Airport Designer.

Mr. Prudden also is widely known as an airport designer, having designed the Ford airport at Dearborn and the Lindbergh flying field at San Diego.

Mr. Whitehead has been interested in aeronautics from the early days, so much so that he was among the first 29 aviators sent to France during the World War. He served as first lieutenant in the air corps, A. E. F., from October 1, 1917, to September 30, 1919, over the Italian and western fronts. He brings to this company actual flying experience and a knowledge of the construction of 25 various types of foreign airplanes having flown all of them.

After his discharge at San Francisco, Mr. Whitehead returned to the business world, where he spent ten years in intensified merchandising, having served as general manager and treasurer of several large corporations.

Mr. Whitehead brings to the business not only flying experience, but a well-grounded knowledge of modern business and merchandising methods.

Local Showers To Follow Clear Weather Today

Continued clear, warm weather this morning to be followed by thundershowers this afternoon is the weather outlook for Atlanta today, according to the official forecast of C. F. von Herrmann, local meteorologist.

He stated Saturday that southerly winds would still be on the schedule and that today's temperature range would be approximately the same as Saturday's, or from approximately 65 to 85.

Capone Is Keeping Promise

:: LOESCH TELLS OF CONFERENCE WITH AL ::

To Stop Vice, Crusader Says

Chicago, May 18.—(AP)—A dramatic personal appeal made by a 76-year-old vice crusader to "Scarface" Al Capone, dread czar of Chicago's gangland, was revealed today.

Frank J. Loesch, head of the Chicago crime commission and special assistant state's attorney of Cook county, who for months fought vainly to stop the spread of crime in Chicago, told today how he finally carried the problem direct to the supposed fountain-head of wrongdoing.

The famous enemies met in a hot, stuffy hotel room early last September and there made a verbal pact, by which Capone was to help "make Chicago a better place in which to live."

Loesch said he believed Capone kept his promise made that day, and that the carrying out of that promise resulted in his voluntary incarceration in a Philadelphia prison.

The representatives of law and order, Loesch accompanied by a secret service man and a government agent, stood on one side of the room, it was revealed, while the overlord of organized crime sat on the other and listened with respect to the dramatic plea of the crusader.

Loesch appealed to Capone's sense of duty as an American citizen and as a husband and father, he said, and asked him to turn from the path of transgression for the sake of Chicago.

At the end, Capone rose, extended his hand aid said:

"I'll help you, Mr. Loesch. Will you have a drink?"

Loesch accepted the promise, but refused the drink.

"I had been trying to meet Capone for two months," Loesch said. "After some difficulty he told one of my men he would see me at the Lexington hotel, where at that time he was reputed to have hired 54 rooms for himself and his followers.

"Upon our arrival at the hotel we had some difficulty reaching his suite. We were conscious of being watched from the moment we stepped inside the door, but no one spoke to us. Upon reaching Mr. Capone's suite, I knocked and a large man opened the door. He asked if I was Mr. Loesch. I knew at once the man was Capone. We shook hands and he asked me to sit down.

"Capone himself sat opposite me, directly beneath a picture of Washington and one of Lincoln. The day was hot and the room stuffy, but Capone donned his coat upon my entrance. The room was very well furnished. There was no guard in the room.

"Capone's face was serious and he waited for me to speak. I said, 'Mr. Capone, I have wanted to see you for some time. I want to appeal to you, man to man, but particularly as an American citizen, for the sake of your wife and child, to abandon the course you are popularly supposed to be pursuing in the underworld of this city.'

"Capone said nothing and I continued.

"'I know from reports that some of your followers have had something to do with violences in the 20th ward. I do not seek information of any kind from you and I do not want you to give away anything of value to you or your followers, but I thought it my duty to come here in secret and try to drive home to you what the continuance of the action of your followers mean.'

"Up to that time, Capone said nothing. The telephone rang, he answered and talked for five minutes. Then he apologized for the interruption and said the call was from his Florida agents.

"I asked him about the future—what he was going to do. He said he wanted to go and live in Florida and give up his Chicago connections.

"'In Florida,' he said smilingly, 'I'll be left alone and they can't drive me out.'

Loesch said he and Capone then discussed the pleasant life in Florida. He told the gangster he assumed he was an American citizen. The statement seemed to hurt him and he assured Loesch he was born in Brooklyn and that his wife and child were Americans.

Zeppelin Passengers Ready To Leap in Parachutes

:: VON KRYHA TELLS OF NARROW ESCAPE ::

BY ALEXANDER R. VON KRYHA,
Passenger on the Graf Zeppelin.
Written for the Associated Press.

Cuers, France, May 18.—(AP)—Dr. Eckner, commander of the Graf Zeppelin en route to the United States, walked into the salon of the ship Thursday afternoon as the passengers were dancing merrily to the tunes of a phonograph and, striking a serious attitude, said:

"Ladies and gentlemen, I have bad news to impart to you. We must return to Friedrichshafen. There is some trouble with the motors but there is no danger. Remain calm. We shall reach home safely Friday evening or Saturday morning."

The announcement came as a thunder stroke out of the clearest sky to the passengers who were not aware of any difficulty to the motors. The dancing stopped immediately as the ship swung about to return to Barcelona.

Such was the dramatic manner in which the passengers of the Graf Zeppelin were made aware that their flight to the United States had failed. Then, after a long, hard pull over the Gulf of Lion and over the southern part of France, the Zeppelin fought for headway past Nimes, Montelimar and Valence.

Just as the sun was setting in the troubled western hazy horizon Friday afternoon, Captain Christian Biser, official German passenger, entered the salon as the ship was taking above Valence.

"Ladies and gentlemen: There is danger. Remove your bags and remain calm. We are forced to land."

General silence greeted the announcement. All, or almost all, of the passengers made for the cabins to get their baggage when one of the men passengers in a high-pitched voice exclaimed:

"What the hell are you talking about?"

In spite of the tension of the moment, the other passengers who had understood the grim warning had been spoken in German, broke out into a general roar of laughter.

It was then explained to the passenger who understood no German that there was trouble ahead and that the ship, unable to proceed, must land.

"That's all right with me," he replied. "No, I understand, it is quite all right."

With parachutes wrapped around their shoulders, instead of the usual life belts of steamships, the passengers watched as the Zeppelin maneuvered above Valence and Montelimar from 3:30 p. m. until 5 p. m., in the most unusual "life boat" drill ever held in the air.

The Graf Zeppelin by this time had completely lost all control of Steering and was turned into a mere balloon, buffeted by the wind continually and drifting toward the Mediterranean in spite of the one motor that was still throbbing. Then suddenly this last motor stopped after several coughing spells, sputtered and died.

The dreaded mistral, blowing from the northwest, was pushing the helpless Zeppelin towards the sea at a speed of 40 miles an hour. The passengers, then thoroughly alarmed, delegated one of their number to go to the navigation cabin where Dr. Eckener with his officers were sitting quietly in their seats. The doctor's son, Knud Eckener, was at the steering wheel. Dr. Eckener, in response to a question, said that it was imperative to find a landing field.

Flying before the wind and headed straight for the Mediterranean with only one motor to aid in the steering, the Graf Zeppelin went through the most momentous hour of the entire flight. Dr. Eckener himself directed his son at the steering wheel and the mechanics at the various levers, seeking to find favorable air currents.

The ship hopped up and down several hundred feet at times. Then suddenly straight ahead there loomed out of the deeping gloom of the evening abrupt flank of a small mountain on which it appeared the ship must crash.

While the passengers waited tensely, the ship suddenly leaped several hundred feet in the air like a trained steeple chaser. Everyone gasped until it was explained that Dr. Eckener, aware of the danger, had dumped a large amount of water ballast thus lightening the ship.

The last thrill for the passengers came as the airship flying before the wind and with all her motors silent, averaged 50 miles an hour en route to the landing field at Cuers. The passengers thought the ship was certain to be blown over the Mediterranean, but by skillful maneuvering she came down and was quickly tethered by the strong hands of hundreds of men on the field.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL PROBES DRY LAW FORCE IN ALABAMA

Montgomery, Ala., May 18.—(AP)—J. F. Partin, special investigator for Attorney-General Charlie C. McCall, of Alabama, referred inquirers to the attorney-general tonight when he was asked to verify a report from Evergreen, Ala., that he was investigating activity of the state law enforcement department.

All efforts to reach the attorney-general were unavailable. McCall was believed to have left the state capital late today for a weekend fishing trip.

Partin was reported to have spent today in Evergreen, although the exact nature of his mission could not be determined.

Walter K. McAdory, of the law enforcement department, was one of the chief witnesses in behalf of Harry L. Nelson and W. L. Dunn, former state law enforcement officers, convicted by a Conecuh circuit court jury at Evergreen last Tuesday of charges involving illegal possession of liquor. Both gave notice of an appeal immediately the court's decision was read.

The case grew out of the alleged removal of a quantity of liquor by Nelson and Dunn from the home of former Sheriff H. A. Barfield, of Conecuh county, in 1926. The liquor was reported to have been captured in a raid and removed from the sheriff's home to Montgomery. Later it was returned at the request of Barfield.

McAdory's testimony that he instructed Nelson and Dunn to bring the liquor here was contradicted by Probate Judge S. B. Dunn.

McAdory also refused to comment on the report when reached at his home here later tonight.

UNDAUNTED, ECKENER WILL TRY AGAIN

considerations must be relegated to the background."

French officials had waived their hitherto strictly enforced regulations against flying over fortifications or military centers in order to afford a safe berth at Toulon for the airship.

The most remarkable instance of French helpfulness, however, was the shutting off of current in overhead high tension power wires in the entire Valence district lest the airship be endangered by falling among them.

The Korrespondenz found the French attitude in general "A striking example of the suppression of one's own interest in behalf of others and a chivalrous act which we acknowledge all the more gratefully because the regulations for flying over France are very strict and recent postponement of French permission to the Zeppelin had led to complaints."

ENGINE SHIPMENT AWAITS ECKENER.

Friedrichshafen, Germany, May 18. (AP)—The four new motors for the dirigible Graf Zeppelin were still here tonight, although they had been given a final overhauling and one already was loaded on a freight car. Chief Constructor Duerr, of the Zeppelin works, delayed his departure for Cuers pending further word from Dr. Hugo Eckener.

PASSENGERS TELL OF EXPERIENCE.

BY UNITED NEWS.

Sir George Hubert Wilkins, polar explorer, said:

"I would rather fly to the north pole than start such a flight again. There are things you can do with an airplane that you can't do with a Zeppelin. I would have given anything to have been able to bring the ship down when we passed near Macseilles the first time. I have ridden many a storm in airplanes during my life but I never saw anything comparable to yesterday's. We swung, twisted, spun, rocked and bucked like a broncho. It was a hard test of a man's stomach and nerves."

Lieutenant Clark.

Lieutenant Commander Vincent Clark, U. S. N., who was aboard as Eckener's guest and an unofficial American observer, described the experience as "thrilling."

"It was undoubtedly the closest any of us ever have been to death," he said, "but much has been proved by the Graf Zeppelin's ability to ride out that storm."

Clark described the experiences of the passengers as "pages out of an old fashioned melodrama." The passengers, he said, were obliged to sit or lie down to avoid being thrown against the walls at every violent lurch of the ship. The dirigible frequently shuddered from stem to stern, making movement impossible for the passengers and difficult for the crew.

Although 3,000 pounds of food was aboard, it was impossible to cook, even if most of the passengers had not been too sick to eat, Clark said.

The most dramatic moment of the flight came near Montelimar, he continued, when the ship listed at an angle of almost 45 degrees. The wind was almost cyclonic and Clark could see motor trucks loaded with French troops following the path of the dirigible, ready to assist if the ship were dashed to the ground.

Mrs. Mary Pierce.

Mrs. Mary Pierce, of New York, the only woman among the 18 passengers, received a United News correspondent when she awakened at the Grand hotel in Toulon this morning and insisted that she enjoyed every minute of the trip.

"I never slept better in my life than last night," she said. "I am ready to go again the minute Commander Eckener says the ship is ready. I certainly haven't cancelled my passage and don't intend to.

"I didn't know that we were in great danger and don't believe yet that we were, although it just shows you can't plan to do anything and be sure of doing it. This upsets all my plans but I am going to stick by the ship.

"No one ran around on the ship, as you have often seen pictured in the excitement of such a moment. I really didn't see any signs of worry or danger. No one told me we were in trouble, but I admit I didn't enjoy the ship's bumping much. Dr. Eckener was wonderful and aided the entire crew.

EDISON QUALIFIES FOR MEMBERSHIP IN WALTON'S CLUB

Fort Myers, Fla., May 18.—(AP)—Thomas A. Edison qualified today as a fisherman. Not because he caught anything but by his ability to tell about "the one that got away."

Mr. Edison has lived right next door to the best tarpon fishing in the world for 4 winters. Today he forsook his previously favored piscatorial pursuits—angling off the end of the dock—and went out for a try at the silver king.

He caught one, too, but it got away. After 15 minutes of desperate struggle the great tarpon leaped high into the air, dived beneath the boat and succeeded in fouling Mr. Edison's line in the propeller.

Undismayed the master inventor vowed to get one and bring it home before he and his wife return north next month.

Mrs. Edison had a thrill on the fishing jaunt today when she hauled a stingaree aboard.

AVIATOR KILLED IN MIMIC WAR IN OHIO SKIES

Columbus, Ohio, May 18.—(AP)—Mimic warfare that has waged over Ohio since Wednesday in the national army air maneuvers, claimed its first victims today with the death of Second Lieutenant E. L. Meadow, of Nashville, Tenn., and injury to Second Lieutenant A. F. Salter, of Los Angeles.

Their ships collided in mid-air high above an outlying residential section and fell in flames. Lieutenant Salter jumped and saved himself with injuries no more serious than burns, but Lieutenant Meadow came down in his ship and his body was almost cremated.

Both men were piloting pursuit planes attached to the 95th pursuit squadron from Rockwell field, San Diego. Meadows, leading a formation, signalled for a turn, officers said, and then, apparently changing his mind swerved into the path of Salter's ship. Meadow's plane was cut almost in two by the impact.

Scores of prospective jurors sidestepped the task of trying the former University of Texas co-ed.

Copper Carbonate Kills Smut in Sorghum Seed

Manhattan, Kas.—(AP)—Insurance for sorghum seed, costing approximately a cent an acre, is advocated by O. E. Graves, extension plant pathologist of Kansas State Agricultural college.

Copper carbonate properly applied to sorghum seed will control 99 per cent of smut in badly contaminated seed, he says, and 100 per cent in moderately smutted seed.

Graves estimates that keneral smut of sorghums takes an average annual toll of more than 10 per cent of the crop where untreated seed has been planted. In Kansas last year there were 20 times as many acres of grain sorghums planted with treated seed as in 1925.

Atlanta and Decatur Poets Also Place in Georgia Contest.

Savannah, Ga., May 18.—(AP)—The Georgia prize of the Poetry Society of Georgia was awarded tonight to Katharine H. Strong (Mrs. Paschal Strong), of Savannah, for her poem, "The Hill."

The judge was Professor Addison Hibbard, of the University of North Carolina. Dr. Hibbard gave second place to three other poems: "The Huntress," by Margaret McGarvey, of Brunswick; "Portraits," by Janet Preston, of Decatur, and "Apocalypse for Sceptics," by Ernest Hartsock, of Atlanta. This prize of $50 is presented by Cheshire Nash, of Savannah, and is open to residents of any southern state. Over 60 poems were received.

Julia Peterkin was judge for the Barrow prize, presented by Mrs. Craig Barrow and open to undergraduates in Georgia colleges. Mrs. Peterkin did not find any of the poems submitted worthy of the prize and it was not awarded.

The Louise Arnold Jackson prize, offered to writers under 19, was not awarded as the judge, Miss Alice R. Eaton, did not find any of the poems of sufficient merit.

The prosodist's prize, offered by the prosodists of Savannah and open to Georgia students in elementary or secondary schools, was won by Cornelia Jackson McIntire in the Hartridge school, Plainfield, N. J., for her poem, "Youth." Honorable mention was given to "Sea King's Daughter," by Florence Faucette. The judge was Mrs. Masters Stone.

Daniel Whitehead Hickey, of Atlanta, was the society's guest and read a group of his sonnets.

MRS. DEKING'S WOUNDS BY RAIDERS DESCRIBED

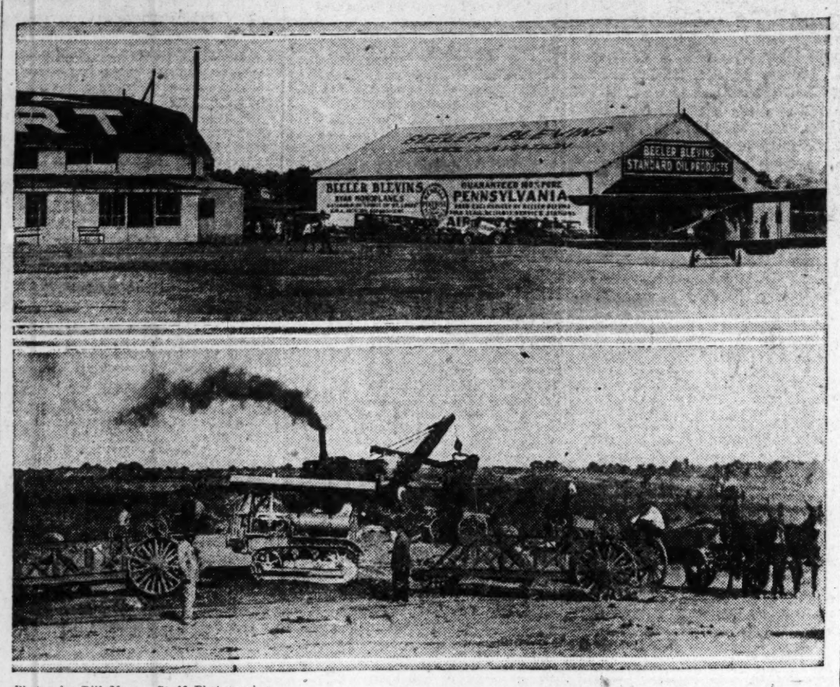

Aurora, Ill., May 18.—(AP)—Dr. J. D. McCullough told a legislative investigating committee today that examination of the wounds of Mrs. Lillian De King, shot and killed by dry raiders in her home March 25, demonstrated that she could not have been slain while stooping to pick up her fallen husband's pistol as asserted by deputy sheriffs who participated in the fatal raid.

He testified that the wound might have been inflicted while she was in a sitting position. Her attorney testified she was telephoning at the time for help when he heard the fatal shot over the wire.

Charles Anderson, deputy sheriff of Aurora, told the committee the raiders began to search the De King home for liquor before they made an attempt to serve the search warrant. This, he declared, had never been brought out in previous inquests by the coroner and by the grand jury, whose sole action was the indictment of Eugene Boyd Fairchild for perjury in swearing to a false affidavit on which the warrant was based.

During the raid Joseph De King, husband of the slain woman, was knocked unconscious and a deputy sheriff was shot in the leg by the De King's 12-year-old son.

Candler Field Development Progresses

Progress at Candler field, Atlanta's air port, is shown in the above photographs. At the top is a view of the hangar line, showing how the ground has been smoothed so as to avoid damage to airplanes. Previously the ground was rough, and taxiing planes jolted about, sometimes injuring the lower wing tips and the landing gear. In the near future, it is planned to construct a concrete apron along the hangar line, shown in the foreground of the top picture. At the bottom, Fulton county forces are seen at work on the new east and west runway, to be 2,700 feet long and 500 feet wide. The steam shovel is grading the section between the hangars and Whipple avenue. The shovel handles 1,500 yards of dirt a day, with the aid of two tractors, six teams and a crew of 15 men.

MISSION PROBLEMS OCCUPY ASSEMBLY

Memphis, Tenn., May 18.—(AP)—Occupied mainly with problems presented by its mission boards and schools, the Associated Reformed Presbyterian Church of the South, approached the close of its business sessions here today, in hope that means would be found to avoid curtailing some of its activities.

The foreign missions board had submitted a report, substantiated by expressions from delegates and off the floor, which indicated that at least five missionaries must be withdrawn from fields in Mexico and India unless present financial difficulties are overcome. A missionary, Dr. J. G. Dale, of Tampico, Mexico, was elected moderator yesterday in preparation, delegates said, for an extended effort to expand instead of limit work in this field.

Home missions fields in most of the southern states had presented their annual budgets for next year. In addition, at least one school, Bryson college at Fayetteville, Tenn., had before the synod a request for funds in addition to the amount usually granted.

The synod closes its business sessions today and adjourns tomorrow. Lexington, Va., was selected for the next meeting, beginning the fourth Wednesday of April, 1930.

WORK ACTION IN CARING FOR INDIAN UPHELD

Former Secretary Handled Funds of Incompetent When Divorced.

Washington, May 18.—(AP)—The interior department today received a decision rendered by Federal Judge John C. Pollock, at Oklahoma City, which upholds the action of former Secretary Work and the commissioner of Indian affairs in handling the funds of Jackson Barnett, an incompetent Indian.

After his marriage to Anna Laura Lowe, a white woman, Barnett's wealth, amounting to more than a million dollars in royalties received from oil on his lands, was divided equally between his wife and the American Baptist Home Missionary Society on the grounds that he was incompetent. The division took place with the approval of the Indian bureau and has been the cause of a number of investigations and at least four court cases.

Barnett said his marriage had occurred after he had been kidnaped. Charges of conspiracy against the Indian bureau grew out of the case, but were later dropped and the gift to the Baptist society was set aside by one court decision. A senate committee which investigated the case has not yet reported, although a department of justice investigation exonerated the Indian officials.

The Pollock decision held the handling of the funds by the Indian officials "must be approved as done under the full power and authority conferred upon the secretary of the interior by congress."

MACHINE EXPECTED TO REVOLUTIONIZE HEMP INDUSTRY

Toronto, May 18.—(AP)—A machine which its sponsors claim may revolutionize the flax and hemp growing industry in Canada as the introduction of the cotton gin revolutionized the cotton production in the United States, was demonstrated to Dr. J. H. Grisdale, Canadian deputy minister of agriculture, here today.

The machine, invented by John V. Selig, of Chicago, but controlled by a Canadian company, separates the fiber of the flax or hemp from the wood more quickly, and more economically, it is claimed, than the hand method now employed.

Washington, May 18.—(AP)—Dr. A. M. Mothwurf, president of the American Glanzstoff and American Bemberg plants at Elizabethton, Tenn., is among a group of witnesses scheduled to appear next week before th senate manufactures committee in connection with its study of textile conditions.

Committee clerks said today it was possible that Mr. Mothwurf might testify Monday, but that this was uncertain as the order in which witnesses would be heard had not been decided upon as yet.

Mr. Mothwurf is one of a group of witnesses to be heard by the committee which has decided to receive testimony from all parties interested in the textile situation. Most of these witnesses are appearing at their own request although some committee members requested that a few be asked to appear because of their knowledge of certain phases of the industry.

DEATH IS PROBED

Postoffice Inspectors Seeking Mystery Solution.

Seattle, May 18.—(AP)—Postoffice inspectors today were investigating the circumstances surrounding the death of H. J. Strommy, postmaster, and storekeeper at Brownsville, Wash., whose body was found in Puget Sound near here late last night. A mysterious postal card apparently mailed by Strommy indicated he had been waylaid by robbers.

The card, mailed in Seattle yesterday and received by John J. Kennett, a Seattle attorney, said: "I'm held up by robbers. They plan on the money order blanks in Brownsville. Notify police and postoffice inspectors. Please let Mrs. Strommy know so I can get help. Your friend, H. J. Strommy."

Strommy disappeared Thursday after making $200 deposit in the Paulsbo bank.

CITY OFFICER HELD IN BANK ROBBERY

Pine Bluff, Ark., May 18.—(AP)—A city official was at liberty under $25,000 bond, and nine other persons were in jail here today charged with complicity in the hold-up of the Peoples' Bank & Trust Company on April 28. The bank was robbed of $20,000 by five unmasked men on that date.

Ralph R. Reed, city attorney of Pine Bluff, charged with being an accessory and receiving stolen property, was the tenth person arrested in connection with the robbery. He was placed in jail yesterday, but late last night bondsmen obtained his release. He will be given a preliminary hearing next Friday.

City and county officers said the warrant for the city attorney's arrest was based on evidence that Reed conspired with the hold-up gang and received $10,000 of the stolen money.

Reed's arrest followed that of three negroes, on accessory charges, yesterday, and the recovery of $1,000 in travelers' checks in their possession. Officers said the checks were part of the funds stolen from the bank.

Others in custody are three men recently arrested in New Orleans with $7,000 in cash on their persons in money belts, alleged to have been among the five who actually staged the robbery, and two men and a woman arrested in Little Rock the day after the hold-up on accessory charges.

The robbers entered the bank at the noon hour, forced employes and customers into the vault, and escaped with all the money in sight. Their automobile was later found abandoned several miles from Pine Bluff.

IRISH ELECTION CANDIDATES BUSY IN WARM CAMPAIGN

Belfast, Northern Ireland, May 18. (AP)—Ulster general election candidates are working 20 hours a day with the campaign fight most embittered between the independent unionists and the official unionists.

The Shankill division is the cockpit of the battling and it is reported that women there exchange blows nightly in defense of the rival candidates. In the east end of the city angry scenes have marked the contest between Alderman Duff, official unionist, and Dr. Beattie, socialist.

Dr. Duff created a precedent by walking into a meeting held by his opponent to hear what was being said about him. The atmosphere had become noticeably tense when tactful police officers induced him to leave.

Prospects of the government candidates are said to be brightening as polling day approaches. The prime minister, Viscount Craigavon, claims he is backing Ulster to give the electors of Britain a lead by recording a smashing victory for the forces of loyalty against the disruptionists, no matter what flag the latter may fly.

Traces of Early Indian Life Found in Desert of Nevada

Las Vegas, N. M., May 18.—(AP)—Discovery in a desert wilderness northwest of here of traces of Indian life believed extinct for at least 30 centuries prompted J. L. Nusbaum, government achaeologist, to telegraph Washington today recommending the establishment of a national monument.

Nusbaum, commenting on his messages to President Herbert Hoover and Secretary Wilbur of the department of interior, characterized the discoveries as "amazing revelations of Indian life long sought by archaeologists."

A three-day penetration of the hidden forest of the Sheep mountains, the lost city of Maopo valley and the Valley of Fire, comprising one of the least known sections of the United States, was made by Nusbaum, Dr. M. R. Harrington, of the Southern Museum, Los Angeles, and C. C. Smith, inspector for the United States general land office.

Area Is Withdrawn.

President Hoover has commissioned the party to explore the territory to determine if the establishment of national monuments in the isolated region might be advisable. Approximately 144,000 acres in the territory have been withdrawn from settlement.

The most prized discoveries were made in the Valley of Fire. Carvings believed wrought by the oldest known human race in America were found on the striking and fantastic rock formations of the valley.

Particular importance was attached to writings on one cliff, which depicted a mountain sheep hunt. The remarkable feature, Nusbaum declared, was a drawing of hunters armed with "atlals," peculiar weapons sought for years by archaeologists but never found.

From this weapon, it was believed, later Indian races evolved the bow and arrow. The carving displayed a long sharp contrivance, bent to elasticity. With this apparatus, a projectile was thrown much as the modern youth fires a stone from a sling.

Carving Only of Kind.

The archaeologists estimated the carving probably provided the only record of its kind in existence and should be preserved as a historical clue to primitive mankind.

The valley, which is a mass of gorgeous color formations in rock, was reached approximately 50 miles from here.

Leaving the valley, the party proceeded to the little known pertrified forest. There they found gigantic trees, which had been swept to earth as though felled by a huge scythe. By the slow process of immersion in silicified water, they have been turned into agate.

The second day of the exploration brought the party wandering through the lost city of Maopo Valley, skeletons of men, women and mammals were scattered about, providing a rich field for study in archaeology.

The last day found the party on the edge of the mysterious hidden forest in the Sheep mountains. Coming into a great, natural amphitheater, the searchers were awed by groves of magnificent trees and massive formations of rock. One discovery included a grove of the rare fox-tail pines.

FLORIDA LYNCHING PROBE IS STARTED

Lake City, Fla., May 18.—(AP)—The lynching of E. R. Romer, a groceryman, and the fatal shooting of his wife, today was under investigation by Sheriff W. B. Douglas, who last night was ordered by Governor Doyle E. Carlton to determine the cause and responsibility and make a full report.

Romer was lynched early yesterday, several hours after his wife had been wounded fatally in a gun battle with Chief of Police John F. Baker, who also was shot. His body, pierced with 13 bullets, was found in a ditch two miles from Lake City.

A mob forced the front door of the small brick city jail and spirited Romer away. He had been jailed Thursday night after the fatal shooting of Mrs. Romer.

The chief of police said the trouble started Thursday when Romer was ordered to clean up some rubbish in front of his store. Accompanied by two other officers, Chief Baker went to the store Thursday afternoon, and when they entered Romer reached behind a counter. The officers said they believed he was reaching for a gun and they grabbed him. As they were leading him from the store, Mrs. Romer fired three times, one of the bullets striking Baker in the shoulder.

The police chief drew his pistol and shot the woman three times. A coroner's jury found he had acted in self defense.

On receipt of the governor's orders last night, Sheriff Douglas said he had no clue as to the identity of any person responsible for the lynching. No motive has been advanced for the mob action.

Romer's body will be taken to Valdosta, Ga., his former home, for burial.

SHIELDS WILL REGAIN CONTROL OF COLLEGE

Buffalo, N. Y., May 18.—(AP)—A committee of the boards of trustees of Des Moines university is preparing to return to Des Moines with the announced intention of taking over the reins of government of the institution after pending legal issues have been straightened out. The committee is headed by Dr. T. T. Shields, against whom the student body revolted. Trustees O. W. Van Osdel, E. A. Roberts and H. J. Hamilton, with Miss Edith M. Rebman as secretary. They expect to be in Des Moines at an early date.

The Baptist Bible Union convention, of which Dr. Shields is president, closed with a quiet session last night. Dr. Shields made no reference to university affairs during his closing address, but after the meeting issued a statement stating that a students' resolution declaring they would not return to the college next fall was due to a misunderstanding on their part.

The statement follows:

"I am confident that when the students know the facts there will be a very general reaction in favor of the position taken by the trustee board. We should, of course, be sorry should the students decide not to return to the university, but discipline must be maintained and the trustees must be supreme, no matter what the cost may be.

"We have been delighted to receive intimation of a considerable number of young people who have been attracted to Des Moines who have never heard of it before, and already applications for positions on the faculty are pouring in on us, and no less than two proposals have reached us respecting the presidency. We have every confidence the opennig of the fall term will see a better and greater University of Des Moines, and we hope a large number of our students will be there to see them."

Etheridge, Hendrix Defend Operations and Functions Of Local Municipal Court

Fulton County Commissioners Answer Criticism Made in Grand Jury Presentments.

Investigation will show that the municipal court of Atlanta is serving the public most efficiently and if all of its duties are taken into consideration it will be found that the court functions economically, declared Paul S. Etheridge, chairman, and Walter C. Hendrix, member of the Fulton county commission, Saturday in an answer to certain presentments made by the recent grand jury wherein the municipal court was criticized.

A statement issued by the two commissioners said that "In no sense can the municipal court of Atlanta be compared with the old system of justice courts." The commissioners said that "it is generally recognized by all informed persons desiring to see justice done between parties litigant that the operation of a court for revenue or profit is most dangerous and fundamentally wrong."

Commissioners' Statement.

The statement follows:

"To the people of Fulton county:

"As members of the board of commissioners of roads and revenue of Fulton county we feel that it is our duty to make public this statement in reference to a certain portion of the presentments of the March term grand jury of Fulton county wherein the municipal court of Atlanta was criticized. The position we occupy as practicing attorneys at the bar of Fulton county and also as members of the county commission warrants us in stating that the criticism is not justified. We have been informed that there was no examination of the operation of the municipal court made by the grand jury and no request made on the administrative officers of the court for information of any character. In reality an investigation will show that this court is serving the public most efficiently and if all of its duties are taken into consideration it will be found that the court functions economically.

"Justice courts in the city of Atlanta were abolished in 1913 by a constitutional amendment and a distinct and separate court established in their stead known as the municipal court of Atlanta. The justice courts were limited to $100 in jurisdiction and investigation will disclose that they were operated at an expense to Fulton county; they operated under the fee system and the county received no funds collected by its officers. A reference to the newspapers of Atlanta beginning in 1911 when the campaign was started to abolish justice courts will show that, in certain instances, evils and irregularities grew out of the existence of these courts and for that reason they were abolished and not because they were expensive or inexpensive to the county. A further reason was the inaccessibility of such courts, they being widely separated in different parts of the city.

Work of Court.

"In no sense can the municipal court of Atlanta be compared with the old system of justice courts. The municipal court is located in the county courthouse in easy access to all interested in litigation. The court has jurisdiction in civil cases up to $2,500 except in matters where the superior court is, by law, given exclusive jurisdiction; criminal jurisdiction concurrent with the criminal court of Atlanta and jurisdiction over the entire county of Fulton in cases where the amount involved is over $100.

"Since 1914 to date there have been over 325,000 suits filed in the municipal court. Of these cases more than 35,000 were cases where the amount involved exceeded $100 which would have, necessarily, been brought and assigned for trial in the superior court or the city court of Atlanta. When this is taken into consideration, it appears that the municipal court is functioning at a saving to the taxpayers of the county in that it saves the expense of additional divisions of the superior and city courts and further, it employs only five jurors while the superior and city courts require 12. Out of the more than 35,000 cases above referred to the municipal court has, in the year 1928, relieved the superior and city courts of more than 4,500 cases. Litigants are given an immediate hearing in this court.

Operation for Profit.

"It is generally recognized by all informed persons desiring to see justice done between parties litigant that the operation of a court for revenue or profit is most dangerous and fundamentally wrong.

"On the first day of January, 1914, the late lamented Judge John T. Pendleton, of the superior court of this county, delivered an address to the governor of the state, the president and members of the Atlanta Bar Association and the judges of the municipal court of Atlanta, the occasion being the organization of the municipal court. In the course of his remarks the judge took occasion to score the suggestion that the new court might produce revenue for the county. He declared that the state should never derive any income from money paid by litigants who are seeking justice. He said, 'Don't drain litigants' pockets in the new court, give them justice.' We heartily subscribe to these views.

"PAUL S. ETHERIDGE.
"WALTER C. HENDRIX."

VALUABLE SERVICE OF INFANT DENIED IN SUIT DISMISSAL

The Georgia court of appeals Saturday held that a child of two and a half years is incapable of performing valuable services, and parents cannot recover for the loss of such services, in sustaining a dismissal of petition in the case of Mrs. Emily Murkinsen against Ball and Fleming.

Mrs. Murkinson asked $10,000 damages for the death of her infant son, killed by a motor truck of the defendants in August of last year in Decatur county. Her petition set out that the child performed services worth three dollars a month to her. It described the child as "very precious, with intellect equal to a child of four or five years of age." Among services performed by the child, the petition said, was that he "helped bring in wood, ran errands, swept the house, helped attend the baby and generally waited on plaintiff, thereby contributing to her support."

When the case came up in city court at Bainbridge, the defendants offered a general demurrer, which the trial judge sustained by dismissing the petition, and Mrs. Murkinson appealed the case.

German Schnauzer, Valuable Dog, Lost By Cartoonist Gregg

Lewis Gregg, of The Constitution art staff, wielded his brush with much less his usual vigor Saturday for he was worried, deeply worried, over the loss of his valuable dog, a German Schnauzer, which disappeared from his home Friday.

Mr. Gregg values the dog highly as it is one of the few of its kind in this country. It was presented to him a short time ago by Robert Woodruff.

The dog is three months old, resembles a 'possum, is gray in color and has "whiskers."

Mr. Woodruff obtained the dog at the Hector Kennels in New York, registered it and gave it to Mr. Gregg. It is considered one of the most valuable dogs in Atlanta.

NAISHAPUR AND PANCHIO BEAT BLUE LARKSPUR

Man o' War's Son Leads Field Through Sea of Mud.

By Frank Getty,
United News Sports Editor.

Churchill Downs, Louisville, Ky., May 18.—With the bit in his teeth and the fire of his great old daddy in his eye, game little Clyde Van Dusen, son of Man O' War, lashed his way courageously through a sea of mud and into a driving rain to spread-eagle the Kentucky Derby field today and add his name to the roll of honor of winners of the greatest of American turf classics. His time was 2:10 4-5 through lakes and rivulets and he paid $8, $3.70 and $3.06.

Herbert Gardner's plucky chestnut, brilliantly ridden by Pony McAtee, led from the flick of the barrier to the final nod of the judges, while some 80,000, drenched with one of the worst downpours in Kentucky Derby history, cheered his smashing success.

Out of the west came the Wilshire stable's Naishapur, another game horse, no matter what the weather, to fight his way into second place two lengths behind the winner. Naishapur paid $4.72 and $3.26. Panchio, from the Three D's stock farm, in Texas, was third, three lengths back. His price was $3.50.

Thunder Aids Cheering.

It was a day to try the heart of the bravest of thoroughbreds, and Man o' War's baby had just what was needed. There was a hint of his mighty sire in the way the little chestnut stepped out in front and withstood all charges.

Lightning flashed and thunder roared and a driving rain whipped the quagmire of track to ribbons, but Clyde Van Dusen, with the rush of the old man himself, knew nothing but to race until the winning post was passed.

Blue Larkspur, pride of Kentucky, failed his backers and sent their pride drooping like the finery of the vast throngs which was soaked through by the storm. Yet the Bradley colt had courage of his own to display in the final charge for the wire, and he was up to snatch fourth place.

Hard To Start.

The favorite, in fact, was beaten out of the money by just about the length of Panchio's black nose.

This Derby was run through the semi-darkness of a sudden spring storm. They were a long time at the post, splashing and sloshing about for more than 15 minutes.

One the outside, Blue Larkspur, the local choice, stood like a statue until Clyde Van Dusen, full of fight and eager for the going, pranced over and gave Kentucky's pride a severe jostle into the fence. Then the Dixiana Stable's Volteur on the rail, began to cut up and delay matters.

The storm had abated just a bit, although it was raining hard and frequent vivid lightning flashes set the startled thoroughbreds to wheeling at the barrier.

With the flash of the barrier and the surge of sleek, silk topped thoroughbreds came the roar "they're off." It was like thunder crashing out after a lightning flash. Then excited cries and individual shouts of joy or dismay, depending upon whether the watchers' choice got away well or was caught and forced back in the first mad swirl of straining horseflesh, the sounds merging into the general tumult as the field lengthened out in the dash for the first turn.

The start was from the quarter pole at the head of the stretch and the first run down past the towering, crowded stands and the broad lawns from which tens of thousands screamed encouragement.

Down the first furlong it was anybody's race, although Blue Larkspur was slow afoot and several of the field horses were quickly out of the early running because of the mud.

At the eighth pole, it was all Clyde Van Dusen.

Deep But Safe Going.

With Pony McAtee keeping the chestnut fairly close to the rail where the going was deep but safe for a courageous stepper, the field went banging past the judges' stand on the first time around with the little Man O' War colt already established as the winner.

No use for the crowd on lawn and clubhouse porch to shout its encouragement to others now, for one of the Man O' War breed was out there winging and it was no use trying to catch him.

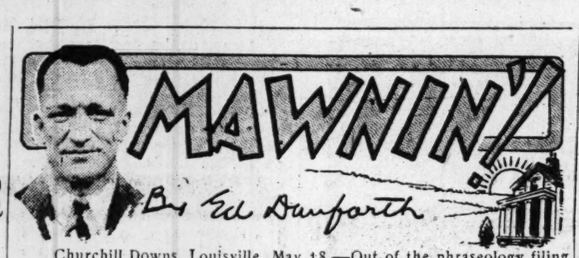

Clyde Van Dusen, second choice in the winter books and the derby betting ever since March, was 3 to 1 at starting time. The new champion pain $8; $3.70 and $3.06. Nashapur, recognized as another game mudder and highly regarded by thousands who came to Kentucky from afar for the classic, paid $4.72 to place and $3.26 for show. Panchio, overlooked until the storm unleashed its fury and upset all the early betting odds, finally paid only $3.50 to show.

Through the murk and driving rain from the southeast, others in this

Danforth's Story On Page One

Ed Danforth's colorful story of the Kentucky Derby begins on Page One of the news section and is continued to the second page of the sports section. In addition to the main events of the race Danforth sees and records the human interest items that others miss. Don't miss his story of how Clyde Van Dusen ran to victory at the Downs Saturday. His story, with Frank Getty's fine report, give Constitution readers unusually complete Derby service.

Churchill Downs, Louisville, May 18.—Out of the phraseology filing cabinet, turf writers today withdrew the battered line, "Derby Day Dawned Rainy and Cold."

Thousands awoke from what brief sleep they could get amid sounds of revelry and deviltry at the cross-roads and learned the damp truth. Touseled heads were poked out of hotel windows, heavy eyes blinked as the cold drizzle struck and imprecations arose on the morning air. The foreboding spray of early morning developed into a soaking, sodden shower by 10 o'clock. Thousands left their finery at home and, donning old clothes and slickers, prepared to make the best of what has come to be regarded as a typical Derby day.

Into the inclosure they came from 8 o'clock on, and by 10, when the rain was at its heaviest, fully 40,000 people were inside the gates. Those discharging from street cars and taxicabs were met by tipsters selling envelopes that contained the precious information on not only the Derby, but the other six races. Vendors barked the colorful trade names of their selections. Long Shot Jack Adams, Big Jack's, Tod Sloan's, Clocker James Jerry Dunn's, Clocker Lewis, Trackman's Harvey Ames, Man o' War's and Colonel Roy's, and adding to their cries, "Five winners yesterday, folks," and "I got the Derby winner."

On leaving the track tonight handbills from most of these tipping agencies were tossed into your automobile or street car showing what winners each had. Of course the handbills are printed after the fifth race has been run and always contain the names of five winners. The tipsters guessed at the last two. And while I am inclined to discredit it, it is said that if one were to buy 26 of these tipster's envelopes he would receive the name of exactly 26 Derby horses. The tipsters are accused of playing safe and giving out every horse in each race every day. That smacks of downright dishonesty and probably is merely propaganda put out by the democrats who here are opposed to horse racing.

Huge trucks were drawn up outside the tracks loaded with camp stools. Men and boys bawled them for sale at 50 cents each. "Get your reserved seat here for the Derby; you ain't got a chance inside," was the refrain.

Few actually see the Derby, to tell the truth. The great rank and file jammed on the lawn and packed into the grandstand merely get fleeting glimpses of the horses as they pass the stand for the first time and as they come back home. I will always remember the first Derby I ever saw as a bobbing red cap that passed by on the horizon of heads the first time and was absolutely last at the finish.

Newsboys squalled the hourly race editions of Louisville papers, the various form sheets and two of the Chicago dailies which put out special Derby airplane editions mainly for consumption of the thousands of Windy City folks here.

ORDINARY FOLKS FIRST.

Plain ordinary folks were first to come. They had no reserved seats, but they brought soap boxes or bought camp stools and picked their vantage places near the fence. There they sat from 10 a. m. until 5 in the afternoon stubbornly braving showers and shoulders. They ate from box lunches and bought from passing vendors of soft drinks.

Less hardy persons gathered under the grandstand in what in braver days was the bar and dozed on benches waiting for the big races. Mothers with babes in arms, old men whose rheumatism would not permit them to brave the damp air outside, prim little old women who did not want to get the black satin dress wet sat and sat and sat. Just outside in the lee of a stairway a middle-aged matron from South Louisville sat on a soda pop case holding an infant wrapped in oil cloth.

Curses on the Louisville gouge were only feeble. A Derby crowd has come to expect double and triple prices for everything and takes its bitter medicine calmly, helplessly. Coffee had jumped from 5 to 15 cents. Plate lunches from 40 cents to 75 cents. Meters on taxicabs were disconnected and fare to the races was one buck, five to a cab, or no trip. Wildcat taxis operated on a daring burglary basis. A dapper visitor from Cincinnati loudly proclaimed in the clubhouse that he had been charged $9 for transportation to the Downs. The standard rate for a bed in a major hotel remained $25 per night for the last two nights.

Five in a room brought no reduction in price. Smaller hotels doubled and tripled their normal rates and were paid without a murmur.

It stopped raining at 11 o'clock, but the track was shining in water. Prospects were that with no more rain and a bit of wind the going would be classed as slippery. That means merely mussy to horses and jockeys.

It was easily 1 o'clock before the real fashion parade opened. The people who think everyone knows them began arriving in twittering coveys at the clubhouse entrance and pushed through the turnstiles.

What a great leveler a turnstile is; it must click alike upon the just and the not-quite and the never-will-be. The procession of those wealthy and influential enough to have $8.80 plus the price of box seats was a shimmering display of gay sports costumes. Men of wealth and position and their ladies who furnish society news for shopgirls to read pushed through the gates alongside sleek, dark-skinned gaudily-dressed males of the bootleg aristocracy and their hard-eyed inamoratas. Once inside and mingling with the well-behaved throng strolling on the lush bluegrass of the lawn or lounging in the boxes, it was difficult to tell which was the other sort. One could come nearer to an estimate of caste, however, by rating the men; the women-folk, alas, were made up and dressed so much alike; character lines were buried in toilet pastes and greases and powders.

ALL THE NAMES.

Names—great names—were everywhere. Admiral Cary Grayson; Governor Flem D. Sampson, of Kentucky, and the governors of Tennessee, Indiana, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin were saying things to each other. John J. Raskob was talking anything but politics. Mayor Jimmy Walker, Paul V. McNutt, the American Legion national commander; Mrs. Payne Whitney, Mrs. Irene Castle McLaughlin, Mr. and Mrs. Stuyvesant Peabody, Joseph Pulitzer—but why go on. They are here every year. Names of the rest of the gathering are in the telephone book, the family Bible and the police records.

A light shower came up during the running of the first race and ruined thousands of dollars worth of frocks and straw hats. In the excitement a thousand men and boys crashed through a fence half a mile away across the track and staged a grand rush for the clubhouse inclosure.

Twenty mounted policemen, patroling the center field, spurred their horses to a gallop and rode ruthlessly over expensive shrubbery. However, they found themselves hemmed in by a fence and their heavy-hipped cobs could not jump it. They were forced to dismount and head off the deadhead brigade on foot. The attack was repulsed partially.

HUGE CROWD.

As the mud-spattered jockeys, drenched silks clinging to their skinny ribs, reported after the first race, it was evident that the crowd was up to its usual proportions. The grandstand was closely packed, the main lawn was almost impassable and moving about was an arduous task. Those few who had good seats or standing places just stayed on and suffered. In the freer spaces of the clubhouse side, however, the crowd was a moving pageant of color, a bed of ambulant flowers—to get poetic for no apparent reason.

The preliminary races were reeled off in perfunctory style. Each bugle call to the post drew a murmur of excitement from the crowd and each finish brought its rising surf of hurrahing. The sun threatened to shine briefly, then withdrew again behind gray clouds. Out again and in again, it tantalized the mob and drove photographers close to insanity. Only one thing was certain. The Derby would be decided over a slippery track. No natural agency could dry out that double-layer of caramel custard on the old hardpan subsoil.

SUN BREAKS THROUGH.

As the third race was called, the sun broke through the gray clouds and soon the sky was filled with billowing white masses. It was a mockery from a racing standpoint, however, for the track still was muddy.

Radio broadcasters in their towers and sound-proof kiosks mouthed endless, unbroken, rushing streams of words that were scattered to the four winds and gave a sort of picture at least to millions. The program was re-broadcast to England and the continent.

Thus was the world listening through the transom at the Downs.

THE SCRATCHES.

Scratches came in slowly on the posted list of 26 Derby candidates. Owners were reluctant to withdraw their steeds with any sort of track conditions possible. St. Ignatius and Hiram Kelly, the Williamson and Herring entry, were the first to be scratched. Then followed Boris, The Choctaw and lastly Ervast, the California speed marvel, whom Baron Long decided would be mired in such going as was presented. All these were in the mutuel field.

GATE CRASHERS.

Just before the fourth race the great unterrified army of the back stretch staged the annual gate crashers' handicap. Fully 5,000 of them

NICK CULLOP IN LINEUP, GETS 3 HITS

Roberson Kayoed in First; Error Aids Foe in Second.

By Dick Hawkins.

Atlanta's Crackers are looking for a large hole. Large enough to crawl in but not too large to be pulled in after them. After sweeping a series with the redoubtable Chickasaws of Memphis Wilbur Good's charges dropped three straight to the lowly Travelers of Little Rock. The double victory by Little Rock made it three straight.

The scores were 9-7 and 2-1.

All this was accomplished by the Crackers with the aid of Nick Cullop, blonde slugger just returned from Brooklyn, and without the assistance of Max Rosenfeld, who left for Toledo Saturday.

That first game was a terrible strain on the collective nervous system of the 5,000 fans who piled into Colonel Spiller's place of business for the double bill. It was just one of those ball games. Each team had it won a couple of times but the Travelers had the last turn.

ERROR HURTS.

The nightcap started out like a ball game and ended like one except for one little miscue on the part of Frank Haley, who allowed Wade's throw to slip through his fingers in the final frame to push the winning run across for the visitors.

But let's take them in the order of their difficulty. The initial contest went three innings like a ball game. Old Rube Roberson, who has as many years upon his head as hair, looked like the old-time Rube when he seated the Travelers in order for three innings. But that fourth found Uncle Rube dispossessed of his mastery and ambling to the showers.

To open the inning Willingham beat out a hit to Frank Haley and went to third when McDaniel was thrown out by Sheehan. Klinger socked a long sacrifice fly to Cullop to score Willingham and it seemed with two out that the Crackers might bridge the lapse without serious trouble.

SIX HITTERS.

That, however, was figuring without the next six hitters. Rose singled cleanly to left and went to third when McLeod lapped a double over Frankie Zoeller's head. The flowery one scored on Turpin's single after Whitney had drawn a pass. That wasn't so bad but Oliver refused to let well enough alone. He basted a long double to left center and cleaned the bases to make the count 5-0. Williams ambled to the plate and struck the first pitch into the colored stands for a home run, scoring Oliver ahead of him.

Naturally, that was the last of Rube Robinson, though he did manage to get Willingham out to retire the side. Turpin was pitching good baseball and the cause of the Crackers looked lost but Art Olsen took the hill and the Travelers were halted.

BIG INNING.

Atlanta went scoreless until the sixth when Dick Wade tripled high on the right field bank and scored on Jones' single with two down. That was all but in the seventh Lopez started something that gave the fans their six bits' worth. He singled to right and went to third on Olsen's single. Frankie then hit to McDaniel and Lopez was out at the plate. Sheehan walked to fill the bases and two men scored on Wade's double. That left Sheehan and Wade on base and Cullop walked to load the sacks. Haley was due for a hit and he got it, scoring Wade and Sheehan then the big blonde counted on Jones' third hit of the day. Johnny advanced on an infield out but Lopez on his second trip to the plate in that hectic inning, was called out on strikes and the score was knotted at seven-all. Moore pitched to two batters in this frame but failed miserably.

In their half of the eighth Little Rock took the lead, never to be headed. Klinger doubled cleanly to left center and advanced to third on an infield out. With two down, Bokan batted Eickert, who had taken the mount on Moore's demise. The Traveler pinch-knocker hit a screamer to Frank Haley, who made a dazzling one-handed stop, but threw a bit wild to first. Klinger scored on the play.

Mariott hit for Olsen in the last of the eighth and beat out a roller to third. After he had been sacrificed to second by Zoeller, Sheehan hit a sizzler to Willingham and Mariott was tagged out on the line. Sheehan stole second to be in a position to score, but it was of no avail. Dick Wade was an easy out from Eickert to McDaniel.

The Travelers tallied another in the final frame when Williams slapped a triple to the left-field fence and scored on Willingham's sacrifice. That was all, and it was enough for the Crackers. They couldn't even tie it.

SECOND GAME.

The short session, that was called at 5 o'clock to allow both teams to catch a train, was a heart-breaker for the Crackers to lose. They got great pitching from the portside paw of old Red Odham, but Haley's miscue lost the hand, and the best of them will do such things at such times.

Eickert, who finished the long session, took the mound against Oldham, and both teams went scoreless for three fast innings. In the fourth Wade singled to open the inning and Nick Cullop got his second hit of the game to send Wade to second. Haley hit to Eickert, who caught Wade at third and Cullop went to second.

Master Minds of the Travelers

Jack Steele, aided by Norman (Kid) Elberfeld, the Tobasco Kid, have the Travelers up in the Southern league race, their latest accomplishments being two out of three won from the Barons and three straight from the Crackers. Steele is shown with the batting order in his hands while the Kid, leaning at his right, offers suggestions. Elberfeld returned to the game after an absence of two years.

Georgia Student Runs 20 Miles on Boast

Freshman Bernhart Is Hero of Campus After Proving Assertion Made in "Bull Session."

By John Still.

"Throwing the bull" has ever ranked first among indoor sports at college. In the "bull session" weighty problems of the world have been settled by the cultured youth of the land; merits and demerits of woman carefully enumerated and discussed. Many have been the idle boasts made by some young collegian. College teams have been piloted to championships on second-guessing. College boys have performed marvelous feats.

And it usually comes to pass that when some young man makes a certain remark the kitchen cynics of the gathering, to whom nothing is right, immediately condemn him to the region below. After feeble protest the maker of the outlandish statement usually subsides.

But Carl Bernhart, of the University of Georgia and former student of Tech High, in this city, with the audaciousness of a freshman, has reversed the order of things.

Carl Bernhart told classmates that he could run 20 miles, and did. It happened last Thursday night.

Freshman Bernhart and associates were assembled in somebody's room, talking of the things that collegians talk about, which is anything under the sun.

The subject of this particular "bull session" was athletics. Personal accomplishments in the realm of sport were extolled. One young gentleman announced that he could run 10 miles and not so much as break out in a gentle perspiration.

At this point Bernhart took the spot. "I," said the freshman, "can run 20 miles."

"Pipe down, freshman." "Never make joking remarks in the presence of your elders." "You are crazy." "You are drunk." "No one can run 20 miles."

Bernhart withstood this verbal assault and repeated himself. "I can run 20 miles."

No one would believe him. Finally, moved to desperation, he announced, "Okay. Be down at the track tonight

MOKATAM WINS BELMONT RACE

BY ORLO L. ROBERTSON,
Associated Press Sports Writer.

New York, May 18.—(AP)—Harry F. Sinclair's Mokatam revenged his one defeat of the season today as he made another bid for 1929 juvenile honors in decisively whipping a good field of two-year-olds in the Keene memorial at Belmont park.

Only once since he started his racing career April 27 has the Rancocas stable juvenile tasted defeat and that at the hands of Crack Brigade, but today Mokatam demonstrated that he is not only a worthy candidate for turf honors but a better sprinter than Crack Brigade. T. M. Cassidy's colt was forced to take the place, a half-length back of Mokatam. Show money went to the favorite, W. R. Coe's Caruso. Grattan, which was coupled with Mokatam and ridden by La Verne Fator, was crowded out in the first furlong but finished with a great burst of speed. The race was worth $8,100 to the winner and the four and one-half furlongs were run in :52 2-5 seconds.

The ladies' handicap, second oldest fixture at Belmont, went to Lace, from the Mendham stable, with Fator in the saddle; Bateau was second and Bradley's Peggy third.

Clyde Gamest Horse In World, Says McAtee

By Ed Danforth.
Constitution Sports Editor.

Louisville, Ky., May 18.—(Special.)—Linus McAtee, the jockey with the boy's thin body and the face of an old man, was jubilant after the race as he shuffled out of his silks and into his street clothes.

"I was scared to death when I saw Little Clyde," he said. "I was afraid he would never get in with me on his back. Now I know he is the gamest horse in the world. Clyde just jumped away into the lead and I just rode him. I used the whip just four times, lightly, when I thought they were closing in on us from behind, and each time he shot away with more speed. I never rode a smaller horse nor a better one."

MOBILE CLUB SALE TIPPED

Nicklin, of Chattanooga, Negotiates Sale; Attendance Bad.

Mobile, Ala., May 18.—John D. Martin, president of the Southern Association of Baseball Clubs, and Sammy Strang Nicklin, one of the owners of the Chattanooga club, are in Mobile. Report has it that Nicklin has been asked by Martin to make an offer for the Mobile franchise. They consulted with some of the directors, but all parties deny that any dickering is on.

The present owners of the Mobile team have been operating at a loss for years and are getting tired of it. That is not denied. Crowds of 200 during the week days and 1,600 on Sunday have been attending ball games.

Nicklin said that he was here for the good of the league and that if he could get the franchise he would consider it. President Martin is said to be acting in the interest of the league to try and hold the Mobile franchise. The city is the best drawing card in the second division of cities with a winning club.

President Martin smiles and says that he has no statement to make, while William A. Douglas, chairman of the board of directors of the Mobile team, said that he had nothing to give out at this time. However, two days ago the local club published an advertisement calling upon Mobilians for support by attendance at games here. Several days before that league directors held a meeting here and it was learned from an authoritative source that the financial condition of the Mobile club had been discussed.

President Frank H. "Chick" Roos, of the local club, denied two days ago that any negotiation was on between the Mobile association and Nicklin.

Cubans Leading In Cup Rounds

Havana, May 18.—(AP)—Mexico won the doubles event in its first round Davis cup tie with Cuba today but the Cubans still lead, two matches to one, as a result of their triumphs in both of the opening singles matches yesterday. Today Robert Kinsey, former American star, and Alfredo Unda, of Mexico, defeated Ricardo Morales and Gustavo Ulmann, Cuba, 6-2, 10-12, 6-4, 6-3.

Yale Crew Wins Regatta Feature

Ithaca, N. Y., May 18.—(AP)—Yale's varsity eight defeated Cornell by one length and Princeton by three in the two-mile feature event of the Carnegie cup rowing regatta on Lake Cayuga today.

OLD MAULER WILL GET ONE COOL MILLION

Normile, Former Manager, Shows Papers; Bout at Agua Caliente.

Reno, Nev., May 18.—(AP)—Jack Dempsey, dethroned king of heavyweight battlers, will enter the ring again at Agua Caliente, Tia Juana's neighboring rival in Mexico, in an attempt to regain the world's championship honors, Gene Normile, who was Dempsey's manager for the first Tunney fight, announced here today.

Normile arrived in Reno from the east last night by train and this morning took the Reno-Los Angeles plane of the Nevada Airlines for San Diego to complete arrangements for Dempsey's attempted comeback.

While in Reno, Normile showed friends an agreement signed by Dempsey which carries a million-dollar guarantee for the former heavyweight king to meet an opponent at Agua Caliente at a time to be fixed later. Normile is reported to have said that the contract is a result of negotiations that started when Dempsey was offered $800,000 to enter the ring at Agua Caliente and that the one-million-dollar figure was finally agreed upon.

It is understood that those backing the proposed fight include Wirt G. Bowman, head of the syndicate which is promoting Agua Caliente, and Baron Long, race track man and owner of the U. S. Grant hotel in San Diego. Bowman is related by marriage to Governor Rodrigues, of Lower California.

Fight Report Is Doubted.

New York, May 18.—(AP)—Reports from Reno that Jack Dempsey would attempt another comeback at Agua Caliente, were met with general skepticism among the fight fraternity here tonight.

Dempsey himself could not be reached but in recent weeks he has made it clear that not even he himself knows whether he will ever reenter the ring again. There have been constantly recurring rumors that Dempsey would fight someone somewhere but the former heavyweight champion has disclaimed all knowledge of any such plans.

The fact that he has been indulging in light training at a local gymnasium has led some experts to believe he would attempt a comeback. Dempsey's own explanation, however, is that he is training only so that "My clothes will fit me."

Woodberry Wins Big Track Meet

Chapel Hill, N. C., May 18.—(United News.)—The crack Woodberry Forest track team from Orange, Va., piled up 55 1-2 points to win the University of North Carolina's third annual southern interscholastic track and field meet for preparatory schools here today.

The cream of Dixie's prep school athletes broke five meet records and tied two more.

Duval Goldsmith, one-man team from Fishburne Military academy, Waynesboro, Va., furnished the feature of the day with his all round performance, winning 23 points single handed and took second place for Fishburne among the 11 teams entered.

Augusta Military academy, Fort Defiance, Va., took third place with 22 points, trailed by the defending titleholders, Monroe Aggies, Monroe, Georgia.

Africans Beat Sweden at Net

Saltsjoebaden, Sweden, May 18.—(AP)—South Africa qualified today to meet Great Britain in the third round of the European zone Davis cup round by winning the third straight match of the five-match series with Sweden.

L. Raymond and N. Farquarson, of South Africa, defeated M. Oestberg and M. Mueller rather easily in the doubles, 8-6, 6-2, 6-2. Today's victory, coupled with two wins yesterday in the singles, clinched the series for South Africa regardless of the outcome of two more singles matches tomorrow.

Spiller Seeks Rule on Pitcher

Colonel Bell Jackson Spiller, in the lowest depths of despondency after the double defeat at the hands of Little Rock, is trying to bolster his pitching staff, but isn't sure of his status.

Chief Wilkins, sent from Shreveport on trial, will be taken on the road trip, but cannot be signed unless Colonel Spiller is allowed to place Joe Keifer on the voluntary retired list. Spiller has asked permission to place Keifer on the retired list as from April 20 so that he may be reinstated on June 1. If this is granted by the national office Wilkins will be signed to take Keifer's place until the Texan recovers from his injury and illness.

Danforth Says Naishapur's Race in Stretch Supplied Thrills

Clyde Ran Without Mud in His Face

Took Lead and Held It To Miss Steady Shower That Discouraged Others.

and had permitted none to kick mud back at him.

Owner Absent.

H. P. Gardner, elderly millionaire carpet manufacturer of New York, was not here to see his pet win. Mr. Gardner got so worked up over the race that he feared a heart attack, it is said, and wired Trainer Clyde Van Dusen, for whom the gelding was named, to receive the trophy. First the gelding restive and dancing was decorated with the floral horseshoe. Then Jockey McAtee was handed a bouquet of red roses. Linus removed his cap and revealed a correct part in his greased hair and a smile full of teeth. It was no new experience for him, he had piloted Whiskery home two years ago.

It was not a great race save in the way in which the son of Man o' War out-classed his opposition. The time was just a gallop, 2:10, not remarkable even in face of track conditions.

Naishapur, the California star, was supposed to scorn the mud yet he ran a great game race and was but two lengths back of the winner in the final rush. Three lengths back was Panchio, one of the Three D stables' Texas horses. And Panchio made the humbling of Blue Larkspur complete by pushing his nose over the line ahead of the Kentuckian.

ADVERSE CONDITIONS.

Never was a Derby raced under more adverse conditions of weather and track old timers say. And instead of detracting from the performance of the running fool of the Man o' War family it adds lustre to his triumph. Intermittent showers that began early in the day developed into a cloudburst during the fourth race. As the silvery notes of the bugle blew for the Derby, the storm had died away into a stiff hard rain and the track was covered with water. Dry ground was nowhere. Doves sent out from the press box returned with no olive branches. Spectators, already drenched and cold, crowded out to the track side fence as Voltear, with Steve O'Donnell up, appeared in the chute leading from the paddock. The others were detained by a minor mishap and Voltear had made the circle to the left and was half way past the grandstand on the return trip by the time the others came out. Naishapur, No. 5, was a striking chestnut of exceptional size and bearing. Karl Eitel, the Chicago colt, dwarfed the others with his tremendous heft and height. Blue Larkspur, a veritable picture horse, and Clyde Van Dusen, the tiny tot, were outstanding in the parade. The others were just race horses, nothing to distinguish them but the colors of their jockey's shirts. Twenty-one of them paraded, lacking only one of equaling the record field that raced behind Reigh Count last year.

SILHOUETTES.

As the company receded up the stretch to the barrier a quarter of a mile distant, colors became indistinct. And once at the post the horses and their riders became mere silhouettes against the tan strip of track.

Agonizing to the throng was the long wait while the restive animals milled about at the post.

Starter Hamilton had a wild time maneuvering them into a semblance of a line. It was after 5 o'clock and "hit arainin'" when he sprung the barrier and away they went. Panchio and The Nut in the middle of the track, were whirling when the gate was pulled and they shot out first. Essare, the eastern flash, was off a fraction later and the others leaped into action quicker than a stop watch could time. Blue Larkspur got off in fine style but Clyde Van Dusen was a bit tardy.

DARING GAINS RAIL.

McAtee, however, hustled the little gelding up and cut sharply across inside the arc cut by Mack Garner on the favorite. Together the pair raced for a few steps, then Clyde shot forward in his bouncing stride and passed Blue Larkspur and Panchio in a daring slice. The maneuver won the rail for Clyde. Behind him Folking came with a rush and Blue Larkspur, running loggily, pushed into third place as they passed the grandstand the first time.

Around the first turn they swung —Clyde bouncing up and down and reveling in the mud; Folking, under Jockey Pascumas' urging, holding on grimly, Panchio closing in surely, Blue Larkspur sprawling and apparently trying to crowd into the rail.

Back behind the curtain of flying spray was Naishapur, whom in the semi-gloom none could recognize. The California flyer was away slowly as usual but he was just beginning as they turned into the back stretch.

DOWN THE STRETCH.

Over there the ones that do not belong always are weeded out. Folking folded up like a pasteboard suitcase as Panchio crawled closer. Garner already had drawn his whip and was belaboring the flank of the sluggish Bradley colt. He was hanging on with no run in him.

The others were whipped and falling back. The whip fell on listless, lifeless ribs. All were beaten except that brown knight from the golden west. Naishapur was moving up slowly, relentlessly passing one after the other.

On the last turn Naishapur passed Blue Larkspur and moved into third place. Still little Clyde kept bouncing along. The others were chasing him but they were chasing him right into the hall of fame.

GREAT RUNNING.

Panchio, cheaply held, was running his heart out trying to catch Clyde but he never had a chance. And as they straightened out for the last dash, Naishapur collared him and slipped on past in vain pursuit of the toy mud lark that would not be caught. Panchio sagged a bit and Blue Larkspur moved up close under the lash of Garner. But right there the Texas colt stiffened and held his slim advantage. Under the wire they skittered—Clyde Van Dusen, Naishapur, Panchio and Blue Larkspur—with the bedraggled disappointed field galloping dejectedly behind.

The order of finish, officially of the also rans was Windy City, Voltear, The Nut, Folking, Karl Eitel, Upset Lad, Calf Roper, Minotaur, Bay Beauty, Chicatie, Paul Bunyan, Essare, Lord Bradelbane, Ben Machree, Chip, Prince Pat and Paraphrase. That information may assist in paying off horse to horse wagers.

Immediately after the Derby the crowd began trying to get home through the rain. Again the taxicab bandits took their pound of flesh charging two dollars a lift.

PRAISE McATEE.

The die-hards last night were discounting Clyde Van Dusen's victory and giving most credit to Linus McAtee for maneuvering the colt into an early lead and holding him out there on an even pace. What Clyde would have done had he been pressed or forced to run with mud being kicked in his face was the chief theme. The fact remains that Clyde did all he was asked to do and never gave any of them a chance.

Only four times during the race did McAtee use the whip and each time Van Dusen responded with more speed. The time was slow but it certainly was good enough.

Clyde Van Dusen did just what his friends said he would do on a muddy track.

I am afraid the die-hards are composed entirely of those who wagered on Blue Larkspur.

GOT POOR RIDE.

The Bradley colt had worked by himself in the mud with plenty of speed and all the assurance in the world, but racing with a hose of mud being played in one's face is something else for a horse. The son of Black Servant showed extreme dislike for the mud; he sprawled and spraddled all over the track and could not find his speed. Mack Garner apparently was entirely unfamiliar with the colt and did nothing to help him get along. Blue Larkspur ran all over the track, although away early in the clear and free from interference all the way. With a regular stable rider aboard, Blue Larkspur might have been able to make a better showing. He was game as it was to hang in there even though he was bewildered all the way.

The victory of Clyde Van Dusen was considered a triumph for the West and for Kentucky in particular. Although Clyde is owned by a New Yorker he was bred in Kentucky and has done all his racing in the west. California furnished the place horse in Naishapur, Texas the third finisher in Panchio.

SECOND CHOICE.

Clyde was the second choice in the mutuels and paid $8.00 to win, $3.70 for place, and $3.06 for show. Naishapur paid $4.72 to place and $3.26 to show. Panchio was a field horse and as such paid $3.50 to show. That made the winner's odds figure 3 to 1.

It required fully three hours to get all the crowd moved back to town, but when working press men left at 8:30 the great establishment was deserted save for the mutuel booths where men worked under electric lamps seeking to balance the financial sheets of the day.

THE NUMBER '100'

Down on the wet bricks and in the sopping grass were thousands and thousands of tickets bearing the number 100. That was Blue Larkspur's denomination in the mutuels and those tickets were witnesses of the high esteem in which he had been held and the mete of their disappointment.

Kentucky Derby 'Sound' Movies

Churchill Downs, Louisville, Ky., May 18.—(Special.)—Not only was the swift hurrying action of the fifty-fifth Kentucky Derby recorded by every news reel agency in America, but the thudding of the hoofs and the roar of the crowd were recorded on celluloid. Tracy Mathewson, former Constitution cameraman, was here in charge of two units of Pathe sound news. One sound camera recorded the hubbub in the grandstand, the other with microphone close to the track, made the thumping of hoofs as the field swept past. Silent cameras stationed at every pole about the whole track recorded every foot of the race.

DERBY STORY BY F. GETTY

spectacular Derby pack made game efforts to come up to the leader at times. H. T. Archibald's Folking made a strong bid on the far turn, but there was instant response from McAtee and Clyde Van Dusen and Folking dropped back, a beaten colt.

Saluted Champion.

When they turned for home the roar of the crowd, exhorting this horse or that to "come on, come on," change to one of salute to the new champion.

While some of the pursuing pack swung wide, weary of the pace and disliking the slime and water along the rail, McAtee took the sleek chestnut right down to the finish like an arrow.

The thrashing of the horses' hoofs in the mud as they churned their way down the stretch to the wire sounded like the slapping of a multitude of spoons into wet mush.

Jockeys slashed and fought with heels and elbows for a place in the turf's hall of fame reserved for riders of a Kentucky Derby winner. Thoroughbreds looked each other in the eye and thrust bleeding nostrils and foam-flecked muzzles toward the wire, because it was in their blood to race. It was in their blood to give their best, though they knew not why. Well, nothing had blood like Clyde Van Dusen's, nothing out there in the storm had been sired by Man O' War, except this brave little champion.

And so the Derby was won.

While the jockeys of his pursuers lashed their mounts in vain effort, Clyde Van Dusen nodded to the judges two lengths in front of the western flash, Naishapur, with a drumming, splashing group of four or five others lapped on each other in a fight for the money.

When the judges separated them, Panchio was third, with the Bradley favorite, Blue Larkspur, fourth, a nose behind. Then, in close formation, came F. M. Grabner's Windy City fifth; the Dixiana gelding, Voltear sixth; Warm stable's The Nut, seventh, and H. T. Archibald's Folking, eighth. Hal Prince Headley's Paraphrase was last.

WORTH $53,950.

The derby was worth $53,950 to Herbert Gardner, who manufacturers wholesale carpets and other things at Amsterdam, N. Y.

When Governor Sampson, of Kentucky, presented the $5,000 gold cup to the happy owner of the winner, he said:

"A new page has been written today in the history of the kingdom of the horse by a new comer, Clyde Van Dusen, as he sped past the wire leading a spectacularly fleet field of contenders. He has won the Kentucky Derby of 1929. His fame shall never cease.

"In consequence of his contest, the name Clyde Van Dusen shall ever be part and parcel of the classic history of the turf in Kentucky, and with lightning swiftness fame is bearing his name around the world.

"In recognition of the endurance, speed and superiority of this horse we crown with a garland of American Beauty roses, to his proud owner we deliver, on behalf of Churchill Downs, a gold trophy engraved as a testimonial to the skill and judgment he has shown.

"It was a thorough contest, a fair race and the sporting world will acknowledge the winner as the best horse."

It was just 45 minutes before post time when the severest storm of the day lashed down upon the scene with terrific fury.

RAIN HID TRACK.

A driving downpour obliterated the view and flogged the lake which formed rapidly over the entire surface of the track.

When the derby starters came to the paddock, instead of a picturesque parade of high-strung thoroughbreds who were to contest for the American turf's greatest prize, they presented the spectacle of drenched equines with dropping heads and tails.

The clubhouse throng, which joined in the general hysteria when the lathered winner nodded to the judges, included most of those notables who, from year to year, help by their presence, to make the Kentucky Derby what it is.

Admiral Cary Grayson, who was physician to the late President Wilson, clung to a box rail and pounded Charles T. Fisher, automobile body manufacturer, on the back. They jointly own Voltear.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter J. Salmon and D. R. Freeland, for whom this year's Preakness was named, was nearby. Chaffee Earl, the chubby youngster, whose father was a famous reformer and enemy of racing, was rooting home Naishapur, with whom he has had such success heretofore from barrier to finish post.

MOST RESPLENDENT.

More resplendent than the society folk were "Bath House John" Coughlin, Chicago councilman and owner of Karl Eitel and John I. Day, dean of the turf writers. As usual, this picturesque pair vied in the glory of their raiment, "The Bath" being attired in apple blossom ensemble to match the silks worn by his jockey, while Day resorted to all colors of the rainbow for his scenic effects.

Because of the morning downpour, the crowd was not as large as expected, but there was no evidence of any lack of interest on the part of the regulars.

Great was the disappointment of the Derby visitors when they awoke to find the skies that had been so

FUENTE, WINE TO FIGHT HERE

Abelson Announces Headliners for First Outdoor Show of Season.

Max Abelson, who intends to purvey outdoor boxing bouts to the public this summer at Spiller's ball park, announced the headliners Saturday for his first outdoor frolic, which will be May 28.

Tony Fuente, who has been in town for two or more weeks, will meet Frankie Wine, wild man and ex-Montana blacksmith, in a 10-round affair. The two men are heavyweights.

Wine is a young fellow who has had a cyclonic-like career through the middle-west, bowling over some of the best of them. According to Abelson, Wine fought Christner recently and had the rubber-puddler from Akron on the floor more than once. He has also fought Georgia's own William Lawrence Stribling and gave the Georgia heavy a close battle. Wine, they say, has never been knocked off his feet but has kayoed several with his hard punching.

Fuente, a Mexican, isn't such a hard-hitting sort, but has the record of being a clever boxer and hard to beat. He has battled extensively on the west coast and has made a good record.

Abelson is seeking another 10-round bout to back up his feature and will announce it shortly. He says that he is dickering now with a couple of Georgia heavies and will reveal their identities soon with the rest of his card.

swarmed over the fence and poured across the infield in an irresistible rush. They vaulted the fences that guard the race track and dashed pell mell to the barrier in front of the grandstand. Men lining the rail let some of them climb over, but the ladies who stood in hard won places by the fence did not submit tamely. They drew their umbrellas and fully many a skull was roundly thumped.

Only a few hundred got inside the pay precincts.

The others were rounded up inside the infield and restrained by the mounted police.

And so the annual spectacle, always the same, always new unrolled itself from the loom of the Downs and toward 5 o'clock, under treacherous skies, the bugle sounded for the Derby.

Matmen Frown On Butting Tactics

Rank and File of Pachydermic Sport Against Style of Attack Employed by Sonnenberg.

By Ralph McGill.

There is some interesting news along the wrestling Rialto. It seems that the gentlemen who have been wrestling by diving through the air and burying their noggins five or six inches in the folds about the stomachs or their opponents are becoming very obnoxious indeed to the rank and file.

Mr. Gus Sonnenberg, the wrestler who boasted himself right into the racket and then tackled the world's championship as it went by, has been suspended by the Philadelphia commission. He stands charged and convicted of wrestling "set-ups" and refusing to meet worthy young men of ability.

Only last Tuesday night Mr. Stanislaus Cyganiwitz Zbyszko was butted from a ring in a city in a neighboring state. Mr. Jim McMillin was the man who had butted the Pole right out into the laps of the customers.

Mr. Zbyszko climbed right back in the ring and announced that he would not continue if Mr. McMillin was going to be permitted to butt.

Whereupon Mr. McMillin leaped through the air, stuck his head five or six inches right into the Pole's protecting layer of fatty tissue and knocked him right out of the ring again.

MAYHEM.

Mr. Zbyszko grabbed a chair and flung it at Mr. McMillin.

Mr. McMillin countered by leaping over the ropes and grabbing the onion-like dome of Mr. Zbyszko in a headlock. They wrestled in the benches to the great delight of the masculine section of the audience.

Mr. Zbyszko is in a truculent mood these days. Papers in a divorce suit were filed some time ago when some of the big Pole's publicity backfired.

His wife filed the papers after seeing a photographic layout in which there was the picture of a gorilla and one of Mr. Zbyszko. The complaint charged that the caption read, "Stanislaus Zbyszko, the wrestler, not fundamentally different from the gorilla in physique."

This is said to have brought about a feeling of abhorrence and the suit for divorce.

It is no wonder that the Pole is in an angry mood.

WITHIN LAW.

There are quite a few wrestlers who claim that they could beat Mr. Sonnenberg if he were made to wrestle and not permitted to butt. There is nothing in the rules which directly forbids butting but it is not a part of the game.

It is barely possible that the suspension of Gus Sonnenberg may result in some change in the rules and regulations of the wrestling racket.

There is no doubt, however, that the butters came along in time to save the game. They came along to save the wrestling game much as George Herman Ruth, the Great Man, came along to save baseball industry when the Black Sox left it very much in disrepute. Even if they rule them out they should give a rising vote of thanks to Mr. Sonnenberg, Mr. McMillin and the school of college grapplers who brought the gridiron to the wrestling racket.

HELEN WILLS ONLY WINNER

French Women's Tennis Team Takes Two of Three Matches.

Paris, May 18.—(AP)—In a day of impressive tennis play, except for occasional sparkling moments in the doubles combat, the French women's team won two of the first three matches from the touring feminine team today.

Making her first appearance of the season in France, Miss Helen Wills, ace of the women stars, easily defeated Madam LaFaurie, of France, 6-1, 6-2, for the United States' sole victory of the day's play. Madame Mathieu downed Miss Edith Cross, of San Francisco, ranked No. 3, 6-3, 6-2, and the doubles combination of Madame Bordes and Mademoiselle Barbier, of France, conquered Mrs. May Sutton Bundy and Miss Majorie Morrill in straight sets, 6-3, 8-6.

The doubles contest brought out a duel of two women, who were stars when Miss Wills and Miss Cross were swinging nothing heavier than baby spoons, Madame Bordes, Olympic champion at Amsterdam in 1912, and Mrs. Bundy, Wimbledon title-holder years before that, were the aces of the battle, which saw most of the games go to deuse. The French pair, however, finally won out through superior agility and forcefulness.

Miss Wills did not appear to be at her best, but she didn't need to be as Madame LaFaurie seemed to be awed at playing the world's ranking player. In the first set the French girl scored only 12 points, but braced up to make more of a fight of the match in the second set.

Miss Cross, who has not been playing up to standard since landing on the continent, couldn't get the range of the courts and fell an easy prey to Madame Mathieu, who played steadily, showing flashes of vim and power.

Although the weather was splendid for tennis, the matches drew only a small crowd to the Roland Garros stadium, Misses Wills and Cross introduced the fad of playing without hose, a style new to Paris society. If the style catches, however, it will not be the first that Miss Wills has brought to Rue de la Paix, for her white eye shade, which Paris saw for the first time only a few years ago, was worn today by several of the French players.

Yale Crew Wins By Fast Finish

Ithaca, N. Y., May 18.—(AP)—A wily and game Yale varsity crew that saved its best for the last and won in a furious finishing drive whipped one of the finest of recent Cornell crews by half a length and trimmed Princeton by 2 1-2 lengths in the Carnegie Cup regatta on Cayuga lake this evening.

Taking command at the half-way point in the two-mile race, Yale beat off a great Cornell challenge in the finals half, mile and fully earned the right to keep the cup that has been out of the Eli's possession only one year since Ed Leader became coach there in 1923.

The victory was Yale's sixth since this regatta was begun in 1911. And make matters even in that respect with Cornell whose string of triumphs were won back in the days of Coach Pop Courtney.

Cornell men gained some solace in a victory in the freshman race, but Yale won the junior varsity as well as the feature event capture the major share of the honors.

The varsity race was in 10 minutes, 38 seconds; the junior varsity in 10:39; and the freshmen in 10:35; all for two miles.

Grant Sets Record At Capital City

Shoots 67 To Smash Course Mark on New Summer Greens.

By Dick Hawkins.

Summer rules were opened at the Capital City Country Club Saturday and John Grant, Jr., celebrated the occasion by breaking the course record with a 67, thereby proving to all and sundry that it's not where the ball lies but how you hit it.

John was playing with Bob White, Dave Black and Henry Grady, Jr., when he made the record round and they peddled John's praise from one end of the locker room to yonder end when the match was over.

The record-breaking card is without a blemish except on the sixteenth hole where John took a five on the par-four hole. This smudge was completely wiped out, however, by a brilliant eagle three on the long third hole. Here John hit a terrific drive and laid his iron second close enough to the pin to go down in one putt.

That followed two par holes and was followed immediately by another birdie on the temporary fourth. The rest of the nine holes was exactly even with par but that eagle and birdie turned the nine in 32, three strokes under perfect figures.

The first three holes on the back nine were turned in perfect figures then a birdie on the thirteenth left him four up on par. Two more pars and the five caught him but even par on the other holes saw John reach the clubhouse three under par for the round.

The card:

| | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Par out: | .... | 535 | 434 | 443—35 |
| In: | ..... | 443 | 543 | 445—35—70 |
| Grant out: | .. | 533 | 334 | 443—32 |
| In: | ..... | 443 | 443 | 544—35—67 |

PIERSON IS WINNER.

Combining good luck with good golf, Frank Pierson won first honors in the blind handicap match with par at Druid Hills Saturday and thereby enriched himself by several golf balls. Veazey Rainwater and Julius Hughes were second with Charlie Holcomb was third and Joe Horacek, Jim Floyd, R. H. Dobbs, W. A. Fuller and W. Hollyman tied for fourth place.

The novel tournament saw the players choose their own handicap and play a match against par. After the round, Uncle Ed Barnes pulled a slip from the hat that read "4-up" and Frank Pierson was just that.

Hughes and Rainwater were 3-up and Holcomb was 2-up. The other five were all 1-up on par when the match ended. Veazey shot a 74 to lead the scoring while Julius had a 75.

ENTRIES JOURNEY IN.

If the rush of entries can be used as an indication, the American Legion field day at beautiful Forrest Hills will be nothing short of a soldiers' reunion.

The post headquarters are being flooded with applications for the golf tournament but Forrest Hills is large enough to accommodate many more.

Nor will golf be the only pastime for the pastimers on May 30 when the congregate at the "little big" club out Decatur way. There will be horseshoe pitching, checker playing, bridge playing and tennis playing, all in the space of a day.

This is not to mention the main attraction which takes place at high noon when the barbecued pig comes off the fire in big juicy slices. Arrangements have been made to give all these attractions "for the price of one" and the legion office is anxious to get all applications in as soon as possible.

California Wins Empty Honors

Coliseum, Los Angeles, May 18.—(AP)—Two national intercollegiate records were established here today at the California intercollegiate track and field meet in which the disqualifying of the majority of the Stanford athletes gave the University of Southern California a decisive victory with a total of 70 points.

Harlow Rothert, Stanford weight man, heaved the shot distance of 51 feet 1 3-8 inches, bettering by more than a foot the mark of 50 feet, one inch established last year at the intercollegiates at Cambridge by his teammate, Erick Krenz, who finished second today.

Emory Curtice, captain of the University of California track force, hurled the javelin 209 feet 9 3-4 inches, surpassing by more than four feet the previous record of 205 feet 7 5-8 inches made by C. B. Hines, of Georgetown in Philadelphia in 1927.

Stanford, picked to win the meet, went down to defeat when Robert S. Weaver, chairman of the Southern Pacific Association of the Amateur Athletic union, upheld the referee, who disqualified athletes at the university for the use of mechanical devices in the form of red wooden blocks spiked to the ground. These blocks were used by some of the Stanford men to brace their feet or rest their hands while in a starting position.

Handicapped by the loss of point makers, Stanford finished second with 46 1-2, California third with 33.

Coggeshall Wins College Net Title

Chicago, May 18.—(AP)—Harris Coggeshall, Grinnell college tennis star, today became the first central intercollegiate singles champion, winning the title round match from Tom Markey, of Notre Dame, 3-6, 7-5, 6-3, 6-2.

100 Airplanes At the Derby

Churchill Downs, Louisville, Ky., May 18.—(Special.)—Business men from Chicago, St. Louis, Cleveland and Little Rock, Ark., left their homes after breakfast this morning and were borne to Bowman field near Louisville in swift airplanes. Some of them left immediately after the race and were back home in time to read about it in first newspaper extras. Thus is distance annihilated these days.

Among the airplane arrivals at dusk last night was Joseph Pulitzer, the publisher, and a party from St. Louis in a huge Fokker trimotored plane.

Over 100 airplanes were waiting late today at Bowman field to take their passengers home at once or start at daybreak Sunday.

Atlantan Named Bulldog Leader

Athens, Ga., May 18.—(Special.)—Harry Gorman, of Atlanta, was tonight chosen to captain Georgia's 1930 baseball team at an election following the close of the current season. "Brick" Davenport, of Norcross, was elected alternate captain, and Sanders Walker, Macon, is to be next year's manager.

Coach Bill White announced that letters had been awarded to 13 players for the season's services—Gorman, catcher; Murdock, Parks, Carithers and Frye, pitchers; Rothstein, Martin, Davenport, McGaughey and Day, infielders; Herndon, Captain Chafin and Steele, outfielders, and Manager Allen Connally.

The Bulldogs claim the conference baseball crown on the basis of having won a far greater number of games than any other nine. The Georgians won 12 conference tilts and lost 5.

STUDENT ON 20-MILE RUN

and I will show you about this 20-mile business."

Eight o'clock arrived. Bernhart arrived at the track. It was a circular track. The distance was 220 yards. To run his 20 miles Bernhart must circumnavigate the track 160 times.

Amid much hooting, the freshman set out. He swung along at an easy, distance-consuming stride. Around and around the track he went until his audience was becoming quite dizzy. His stride was steady. He never faltered. Two hours and twenty-five minutes after he started Freshman Bernhart finished his long grind.

He was perspiring, but far from being in a state of collapse. He even had wind enough to start an argument.

"Now, who says I can't run 20 miles."

Freshman Bernhart today is the hero of the Georgia campus. He backs up what he says in a "bull session." Campus comedians have dubbed him the "Iron Man Who Does Not Boast." It sounds like the translation of an Indian name. Indians have always been long-distance runners.

CRAX LOSE FIRST TO L. R.

Jones then forced Haley at second, but Cullop tallied when Martineck came through with a clean single to right. Yelle fanned to end the inning.

That run looked big to the Crackers, but in the first half of the sixth and final frame Oldham let one slip that hit Williams and gifted him to first. He took second on Willingham's sacrifice and stayed there when McDaniel walked. Klinger singled to first right, scoring Willingham and McDaniel lit out for third. Dick Wade scooped up the ball and threw low to Haley. In the scramble a third Haley let the ball get through him and the Travelers' first-sacker romped home with the winning run.

The Crackers could not count in their half. Cullop fanned, Haley singled, Jones forced Blethen, running for Haley, and Martineck doubled to the right-field bank, but Jones was out trying to score.

It was a sad day for the pitching staff of the Crackers. They used four pitchers and the Travelers used three. Good's charges left after the game for four games with Memphis, the series beginning there today.

Sectional Tennis Tournament Set for June 3

MOONEY, GRANT IN EXHIBITION AT FT. BENNING

Boys Play at East Lake. City Tournament Carded June 22.

By Ben Cothran.

Tennis, heavy favorite of summer sports, prepares for its 1929 debut in the city. Two tournaments are announced today and Jack Mooney and Bryant Grant will go down to Fort Benning at Columbus for an exhibition match this afternoon.

Atlanta has always been productive of champions or high-ranking players in southern tennis and interest in the game has always been high. Bryan Grant in his second year as southern singles champion, and he succeeded Jack Mooney, one of the best players in this section of the country.

The announcement of the two tournaments has been expected. One of them is the city championship, to be played on the courts of the Atlanta Tennis Club the week of June 22. The other is a sectional affair open to juniors and boys June 3 until completed. Winner and runner-up in the tournament will, if it is so desired, be allowed to go to Chicago later in the season and compete in the national tournament.

Play will be held on the courts at East Lake, courteously advanced by the Atlanta Athletic Club through its president, Scott Hudson.

MOONEY IN CHARGE.

F. C. (Hop) Owens, committeeman of the National Lawn Tennis Association, under whose rules the tournament will be held, has appointed Jack Mooney as referee in charge. Entries will be made with Mooney at A. G. Spalding's on North Broad street. No fee will be charged but each player must furnish balls for his match.

Boys who had not reached the age of 15 before January 1, 1929, will be eligible for the boys' championship and those who had not become 18 years old prior to the same date, are eligible for the junior championship.

Mooney, Grant Go to Benning.

Jack Mooney and Bryan Grant will get their first honest, real competition of the spring when they play in an exhibition at Fort Benning this afternoon as part of a large sports program at the Columbus army post.

The two Atlanta stars will play each other in singles and Jack reported Saturday that he and Bryan would team against Lieutenant Hedekin and partner in doubles match.

Grant has been playing steadily lately as a member of the Boys' High school team. His opposition hasn't been any too stiff and some observers have expressed themselves as believing that a good, tough opponent on the order of Mooney will do him good.

At any rate, this afternoon's match should be well-played and worth seeing.

City Tourney Set June 22.

Better-than-average tennis players of the town—there are many of them—are getting whipped into shape for the annual city tournament which will begin on June 22 and last through the week.

The tournament this year will be run along different lines than in the past, according to Jack Mooney, who is taking the entries at Spalding's, on North Broad street.

It is the present plan to limit the field to 64 players, in the singles, and 16 pair in the doubles. This will be done by selecting the 64 best players from the entries received for the doubles and the 16 best teams in the doubles entries. This will be done by Mooney and Harry Gault, helping Jack handle the tournament.

OPEN TO ALL.

The tournament is open to any amateur in the city, whether he plays on private or public courts. Entry fees, of course, will be charged and there will be suitable trophies for the winners.

Several of the town's leading players have signified their intention of taking a crack at the singles crown worn by Bryan Grant and the doubles title which Bryan and Malon Courts won last summer.

Those who will enter are: Bryan Grant, Malon Courts, Jack Sumpson, Britt Knox, Harry Gault, Paul Hauton, Kels Boland, Joe Boland, Billy Armstrong, Preston Chambers, Lewis Enloe, George Lewis and Zach Carnes.

Best Staff.

Wisconsin has one of the best collegiate pitching staffs in the country. Maury Farber twice has hurled three-hit games against conference opponents, and Ted Thelander did the same on one occasion.

Will Fight Again!

Jack Dempsey, the Old Man Mauler, couldn't resist the lure of the ring—and incidentally, of course, a cool million dollars. He will fight again this fall at Agua Caliente, Mexico, according to his former manager, Gene Normile, who has shown the signed contract.

Crackers on Road; Play Chicks, Rocks

Atlanta Team Off for Eight-Day Road Jaunt. Back Home Next Monday.

By Ralph McGill.

One solid week of sitting around the smoking cars and sleeping in pullman berths and strange hotels faces the Atlanta Crackers, who closed a week's home-stay Saturday with a final game with the Little Rock Travelers.

The Crackers open their road trip today in Memphis. They close it next Saturday with a game at Little Rock. It will be the first time in history that the Crackers have ever played in Little Rock on Sunday. Recent legislative action made Sunday baseball possible in the Arkansas city.

The Crackers are in Memphis for four days and four games. They go from there to Little Rock, where a like number of games will be played.

Atlanta fans will have very little opportunity to see the Crackers this month. They come home May 27 for four games in three days with the Vols. They then take to the road for a short jump and return home June 3 for a stay of six days.

While the Travelers are growing stronger each week and the Chicks are one of the best clubs in the league, the Crackers hope to win a majority of their games. The recent changes in the line-up seems to have worked for improvement. The Vols are still wrecked with injuries and the Crackers should be able to take at least three of the four games with Clarence Rowland's cripples.

The week's schedule:

Atlanta at Memphis, May 19, 20, 21, 22.
Atlanta at Little Rock, May 23, 24, 25, 26.
Birmingham at Little Rock, May 19, 20, 21, 22.

Columbia Downs M. I. T. Oarsmen

New York, May 18.—(AP)—Continuing a spectacular string of victories without a single defeat so far this season Columbia's varsity eight outclassed Massachusetts Institute of Technology on the Harlem today to win a mile and three-quarter race by five and one-quarter lengths. In three-quarter races Columbia eights also defeated the New Englanders.

Michigan Wins One-Hit Game

Chicago, May 18.—(AP)—A scratch single in the eighth by Oliphant, Northwestern first baseman, today cheated Big Fred Asbeck, Michigan hurling ace, of a no-hit game, but his mates raked three Wildcat pitchers for a 13-to-0 victory. The win was the Wolverines' fourth straight and kept their Big Ten slate clear.

Oliphant's hit was a slow roller down the third base line which Myron was unable to handle fast enough. In addition to stopping the Northwestern batsmen cold, Asbeck led the 14-hit assault of the Wolverines, with three singles in four times at bat. Weintraub and Kubicek hit home runs for Michigan.

Only 28 men officially faced Asbeck who walked three and fanned seven batsmen.

Won Pennant.

Rip Collins, Rochester first baseman, leading the home run hitters of the International league, practically won the pennant for Rochester in the closing days of last season by hitting home runs at Montreal.

Terrell Elected Jacket Captain

Athens, Ga., May 18.—(Special.)—Red Terrell, brilliant second baseman on Coach Clay's nine, was tonight elected captain of Georgia Tech's 1930 baseball team. The election followed the closing of the season when the Jackets lost to Georgia. Warner Mizell was chosen alternate captain of the next year's nine. Terrell came from Charlotte, N. C., while Mizell is from Miami, Fla.

Coach Clay announced that letters were to be awarded to 13 players, Jordan, Little, Powell, Herron, Schulman, Frink, Jones, Dunlap, Mizell, Terrell, Parham, Smith and Hutchinson.

SALO IN LEAD OF PYLE RACE

Passaic Cop Takes First Place From Gavuzzi at Big Springs.

Big Spring, Texas, May 18.—(AP)—Johnny Salo, Passaic, N. J., policeman, today snatched the lead in the Pyle, cross-country marathon from Peter Gavuzzi, of England, who he had trailed since the runners passed through Ohio.

Salo, by finishing in a tie with Giusto Umek, of Italy, on today's 40-mile jog from Colorado, Texas, established a lead for himself of four minutes and 30 seconds.

Gavuzzi was third in the lap, covering the distance in six hours, 49 minutes and 30 seconds, as compared to the 6 hours, 9 minutes and 40 seconds scored by the winners of the lap. It is the second time Salo has held the lead.

Part of his victory today was due to his ability to run in the mud.

The standing of the first eight in elapsed time:

First: John Salo, Passaic, N. J., 325.36.02.
Second: Peter Gavuzzi, of England, 325.40.32.
Third: Giusto Umek, of Italy, 342.05.46.
Fourth: Sam Richman, New York, 356.09.20.
Fifth: Paul Simpson, Burlington, N. C., 356.41.28.
Sixth: Phillip Granville, Hamilton, Ont., 368.24.40.
Seventh: M. B. McNamara, Australia, 390.19.42.
Eighth: Harry Abramowitz, New York, 404.46.52.

Ten Thoroughbreds Destroyed in Fire

Winchester, Va., May 18.—(AP)—Ten thoroughbreds and other livestock were destroyed early today in a fire which burned to the ground a large barn, three garages and two henneries of C. T. Hardesty, Jr., of Clarke county. The loss, which also included farm produce and equipment, was placed at $15,000, part of which was covered by insurance.

The origin of the blaze was not determined.

L. S. U. WINNER OF CONFERENCE TRACK MEET

Tarheels Second on Wet Oval; Jackets Score Few Points.

By Eddie Brietz,
Associated Press Sports Writer.

Birmingham, Ala., May 18. (AP)—Taking the lead almost from the first event, Louisiana State university repeated its victory of last year today in winning the southern conference track and field championship.

The athletes from Baton Rouge piled up a total of 35 points in the fifteen events to nose out the Tarheels from the University of North Carolina, who scored 32 3-5 points.

The Auburn Plainsmen, thanks to the stellar work of their hurdling aces, Beard and Virgin, were third with 28 1-5 points; Washington and Lee, fourth with 21, and Georgia, fifth with 20.

Rain, which yesterday prevented the trial heats and which fell again in the morning and also during the first five or six events of the meet, slowed up the track to such an extent that record-breaking was reduced to an absolute minimum, and although the youthful athletes strained and panted as hard as ever, all but one of the old marks stood the test.

The one to fall was the shot-put, Delkers, a hefty lad from Tulane, turned in a throw of 46 feet 9 3-4 inches to better the mark of 45 feet 9 1-4 inches established in last year's carnival by Zulick, of Maryland.

Largely due to the weather and the condition of the track, the marks in most of the other events were slow, and in only a very few instances did they even approach record-breaking performances.

GOOD LEAD.

Louisiana State rolled up a sizeable lead in the dashes and field events, through the fine running of Brown, the football star, and some exceptional work in the field by Burnett and Songey; but North Carolina, which trailed badly during the early part of the afternoon, came into its own in the distance races and at the close was creeping up with almost every event.

The famous hurdling team of Beard and Virgin scored heavily for Auburn. Beard won the 120-yard stick event, with Virgin second, and they finished in just the reverse order in the 440. The fleet heels of this pair chalked up 18 points for the Plainsmen. Beard then added five more by capturing the broad jump.

Washington and Lee trotted out some long distance performers who made the insteps of the other distance men burn.

One of these was Williams, who galloped home to victory in the 440, and another Backus, who showed his heels to the pack in the 880.

Then Generals clinched third place by winning the mile relay over the highly touted Commodores from Vanderbilt, who had won this event regularly for the past three years.

High scoring honors went to Beard, who finished first twice and second once for a total of 14 points. Virgin was next with 10 1-5 points, and Brown, of L. S. U., came in third with ten.

One of the big features of the afternoon was the football relay. This was limited to football lettermen and instead of using the customary baton, they passed footballs. Some of the best known speed merchants of southern gridirons competed.

Tulane's entries composed of H. Whatley, J. Whatley, Massey and Banker, won the race. Sewanee, Georgia Tech, Alabama and Auburn also entered.

Washington and Lee with victories in the mile relay, 440 and 880-yard dashes captured three first place and led the field in that respect. L. S. U. finished first twice, second four times and third twice, while North Carolina had two first, one second and three thirds.

Eddie Hamm, holder of both the world's records and the all-American collegiate records in the broad jump, tried to better his previous mark in an exhibition this afternoon, but the best he could do was 23 feet 3 inches. His all-American college mark is 25 feet 10 7-8 inches and the world record, 25 feet 11 1-8 inches.

Miller, of L. S. U., and Kennedy, of South Carolina, tied for second and third places in the high jump. They matched for the medals with Miller winning. Daws, of Mississippi A. & M., Virgin, of Auburn, Anderson, of Georgia, Bagby, of North Carolina and Young, of North Carolina State, tied for fourth and fifth places and in the toss for medals Daws and Bagby won.

The special football relay, participated in by football letter men and footballs were passed instead of batons, was won by the Tulane team composed of H. Whatley, J. Whatley, Massey and Banker. Alabama was second; Auburn, third; Sawanee, fourth, and Georgia Tech, fifth.

Here is the order in which the schools finished and the points scored by each:

|---|---|
| L. S. U. | 35 |
| North Carolina | 32 3-5 |
| Auburn | 28 1-5 |

'Shorty' Smith Joins Senators

Athens, Ga., May 18.—(Special.) Shorty Smith, for three years a member of Georgia Tech's football and baseball teams, is ready to make the step up to professional baseball.

He has signed a contract with the Washington Sentors and has been farmed out to the Birmingham Barons by Clark Griffith, manager of the Washington club.

Shorty played at quarterback on the Golden Tornadoes of the gridiron, and has performed capably at the shortstop post on the Jacket baseball teams since his freshman year. He wound up his college career in the series with Georgia's Bulldogs here this afternoon, but will not report to the Barons until after graduation.

TURNESA WINS WITH BIG RALLY

American Downs Herbert Jolly for Thousand Guineas.

By P. I. Lipsey.

Moortown, Eng., May 18.—(AP)—The United States won a glorious golfing victory here today because Joe Turnesa, courageous young professional from New York, did not know when he was beaten. In the thousand guineas tournament of the Yorkshire Evening News, in which the cream of the world's professionals played, Turnesa triumphed over Herbert Jolly at the 37th hole.

The British veteran was dormie three at the 33rd hole and was apparently marching to certain victory over the youthful American pro when the New Yorker overturned all the laws of probabilities and won four successive holes to snatch the trophy from Jolly's outstretched hands.

PUTTING GENIUS.

Turnesa's performance throughout the long and closely fought struggle had been marked by alternating flashes of putting genius and spasms of wildness with his long irons.

When Joe pulled his iron shot from the tee at the short 32nd hole to land among trees beyond the green, to the crowd it spelled his doom. Jolly there went three up and immediately halved the next hole to become dormie. But the Britisher faltered at the 34th where both were on the green with their seconds, Jolly being nearer the hole.

Turnesa sent his putt nearly dead while Jolly's ball stopped 18 inches away. The Briton had another putt to end the match with victory, but after a little tap the ball remained on the lip of the cup. Even then he half the stymied his opponent, but Turnesa deftly pushed his ball into the cup for a reprieve.

Again at the 35th Jolly was nearer the cup in two, but his never-say-die opponent ran his 35 foot putt down while the home player missed his try at half that distance.

After this double and unexpected respite for the visiting golfer the huge gallery swarmed around the home hole to witness the final killing. Jolly was longer from the tee as usual, but the American slammed his second 200 yards to the hole and 12 feet beyond. The Britisher then pitched into a bunker at the right side of the green and played his third without reaching the green. Joe had an easy four and stymied his opponent, but Turnesa the green. Joe had an easy four and

TREMENDOUS SHOTS.

Now the visitor's stock was high with the crowd but Jolly appeared recovered and slashed two tremendous shots to the 500-yard extra hole—the first. Turnesa's second stopped short of the green and at least 20 yards from the cup. He studied the line with great deliberation and then sharply struck the ball toward the hole. It ran straight into the cup for an eagle three and the huge throng shouted applause for the sensational shot. Turnesa dropped wearily to the ground and did not even see Jolly miss his 25-foot putt for the half.

In crashing through to his dramatic victory, Turnesa today defeated the first winner of this event seven years ago. Yesterday he eliminated Charles Whitcombe, who won last year. Joe kept the colors of the United States flying to the last and came through to win first money after his more favored comrades had been eliminated.

He was the dark horse of the American group and three times had to work overtime to win. He was tied for 32nd in the qualifying rounds to determine the 32 players to enter match play and had to play an extra nine holes to gain admittance to the main show. Ernest Whitcombe carried him to the 19th hole in the first round. Today he was tried and not found wanting in 37 hard-fought holes.

Only Ed Dudley, of the visiting American contingent, was here today to encourage the finalist from the United States through his exhausting battle. Spectators said the other Americans had gone to London to caddy for Walter Hagen and the Prince of Wales.

Joe topped off the day with a modest, courtly speech on the clubhouse veranda where he received the handsome silver cup, emblematic of his victory. He expressed his thanks for the kind reception given him on his first season on British courses and his satisfaction at winning over such a brilliant field.

Jolly paid tribute to the prowess of his conqueror and said it was no discredit to lose to a man who wins at the 37th by "holing his drive."

The afternoon card:

First Fame For Turnesa.

Joe Turnesa, tall, slim young professional of the Elsford club, White Plains, N. Y., whose forefathers came from Italy, has been a great golfer for years, but never has had the golfing lightning strike him before. His nearest approach to fame was in 1926 when he was the runner-up in the open championship of the United States, finishing a stroke behind Bobby Jones, who won the title with a score of 293 at Columbus, Ohio.

Turnesa played well in the Ryder cup matches, his first serious golfing invasion of Great Britain, and in the thousand guineas tournament has swept all opposition before him with relentless consistence.

His followers gave up at the 33rd hole when Turnesa became three down and only three to play, but Joe did not quit. He kept slamming away calmly with defeat staring him in the face. He hit every shot firmly and putted with boldness to find his reward beyond the end of the trail.

PREP LEAGUE ENDS SEASON DURING WEEK

Two Games Left for Smithies To Play This Week.

REVISED STANDINGS

| TEAMS— | W. | L. | Pct. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Tech High | 11 | 1 | .917 |
| Fulton High | 10 | 3 | .769 |
| Boys' High | 9 | 4 | .692 |
| East Point | 6 | 7 | .462 |
| Decatur High | 5 | 8 | .385 |
| Marist | 5 | 8 | .385 |

By Welch Jordan.

As the teams from G. M. A. and U. S. B. have quit for the season and are no longer in the race for the prep baseball pennant, the final spurt to determine the standings is narrowed down to six teams, with Tech High an almost certain winner, and the second place a toss-up between Boys' High and Fulton High. East Point will make great effort to come in fourth, Coach O'Rear stating that his team would play out all of its games that have been postponed.

Tech High, the league-leader, has only two games that must be played off this week, one with East Point, High, postponed from last Thursday, and one carried over from May 2, when the Smithies were scheduled to play Marist, but were rained out. Neither of these games should be a great trial for the Tech High nine, therefore they are very likely to win both of them and get the prep rag with only one defeat, that the 1-0 trimming administered by the Boys' High team earlier in the season.

Only one game remains for the Boys' High and Fulton High teams, that the struggle between the two of them for the second berth. Fulton High was to have played G. M. A. two play-off affairs, but the Cadets forfeited, therefore the best that Boys' High can hope for is a tie with the County boys for the runner-up position. Boys' High had one game forfeited to them by the Cadets.

Both the Bluebirds, of U. S. B., and the Cadets of G. M. A., have forfeited to Russell High, of East Point, therefore the East Point standing is raised considerably, giving the Maroons a good shot at fourth place in the race. Decatur High and Marist have gleaned a few points through the defaults of the two teams that are quitting the race, but they will only have to fight it out for the cellar position.

The games that must be played off are:

Tech High vs. East Point, Monday.
Tech High vs. Marist, Tuesday.
Fulton High vs. Boys' High.

ENGLISH PRESS LAUDS GLENNA

London, May 18.—(AP)—Commenting on Joyce Wethered's victory over Glenna Collett in the British women's golf championship, London's newspapers today expressed gratification over the fact that Great Britain was able to hold at least one of its sports championships but tempered that observation with recognition that the margin between the two women golfers was extremely small.

All of them paid tribute to the American champion "who fought with great courage, determination and outstanding skill."

Miss Collett's 34 for the first nine holes was commented upon as astounding and it was observed that no woman player here except Miss Wethered could have withstood such an attack.

"Our champion probably never had to meet a more serious challenge," commented the Post. "Miss Wethered has come to the rescue of her native land like a new Joan of Arc and repelled the invader who threatened to deprive us of one of the few championships we still retain."

The Daily News said that Miss Collett's case was one of the rare ones about which the phrase "moral victory" can fitly be applied. "She was beaten but deserved to win," the newspaper said, adding facetiously with reference to Walter Hagen's victory in the open, that it probably was "better for America's spiritual welfare that Miss Wethered's golf proved in the end to be just a little too good."

It also was remarked that the match revealed how little now separates women's golfing skill from men's. The Mail said yesterday's play was worthy of a men's final, adding that often men's championship finals have not always produced such a high standard of play.

The Post, making a similar point, remarked that "if Miss Wethered has a little to learn from the best men players they surely have something to learn from her."

Big Six In Slump---Waner Shows Gain

By The Associated Press.

Despite the opportunities to clout the ball offered by numerous double headers on the eastern front yesterday, the Big Six members failed lamentably in their efforts at the plate. Only Paul Waner was able to register a gain in the batting averages while Lou Gehrig barely held his own. With the three American league members engaging in double bills, only six hits were made by the entire lineup, Lou Gehrig got a pair in six times at bat in two games to hold his lead at .337 while Waner got two in four tries to rise from .266 to .278. The only change in the standing came when Rogers Hornsby and Jim Bottomley exchanged places in the middle of the standing. The two point margin between them came from Hornsby's having one more time at bat. Babe Ruth and Goose Goslin divided the other two hits.

The standing:

| | G. | AB. | R. | H. | Pct. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Gehrig, Yankees | 24 | 89 | 22 | 30 | .337 |
| Ruth, Yankees | 24 | 89 | 21 | 27 | .318 |

Cubs Gain Ground as Cards Lose; Athletics Win Double-Header

Macks Win Pair From Nats, 5-4; 7-5

Yanks Stay in Running by Beating Boston in Twin Bill, 5-2 and 5-0.

Double victories for the Philadelphia Athletics and New York Yankees featured Saturday's American league games. The Athletics beat Washington, 5 to 4 and 7 to 5. Foxx's single and Miller's double in the ninth won the first game, while a concentrated attack on Brown's delivery won the second.

The Yankees broke their five-game losing streak by beating the Boston Red Sox, 5 to 2 and 5 to 0. Pennock held Boston to seven hits in the first game, while Pipgras allowed only one hit in the second game.

Detroit hammered out an 11-to-4 victory over the Chicago White Sox. Rain prevented the Cleveland-St. Louis game.

SANDLOT TEAMS START IN JUNE

15 Atlanta Teams Entered In Tourney To Decide Champion.

Lads of the sand lot are looking again toward the world series. Again this year the American Legion, in conjunction with the American and National leagues, is staging its nation-wide sand lot baseball championship with the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow.

The pot of gold, as you probably remember, is a trip for the winning team to the series games in company with the major league players who participate in the big climax of organized baseball.

Tournaments to decide state championships will be held in every state. The state champion teams will meet in 12 regional tournaments, six in the east and six in the west, during August, and the regional winners in the east and west will clash in two sectional tourneys to decide the eastern and western champions. These two teams will be brought together in the junior world series, which will be played early in September.

ATTEND SERIES.

The members of the team winning the junior world championship will be guests of the National and American leagues at the big world series, attending all the games.

All tournaments to decide the state champions will be under the direction of the state organization of the legion, while the legion's national Americanism commission will have charge of the regional and sectional tournaments and the junior world series. The cities in which the tournaments will be held will be selected on a basis of accessibility, playing grounds and accommodations for the visiting teams.

Last year, through an unfortunate misunderstanding, the Atlanta teams nearly all had ineligible men on the roster, but this year everything is clear and when the regional or state eliminations are played in Atlanta there may be a local team or two in the lineup.

15 ENTERED.

Major Trammell Scott, who is taking registrations for the local legion post, reports about 15 teams already on the list and about 25 more expected to sign on the dotted line before the first games are scheduled during the first week in June.

Because of the time needed to check eligibility and fix the pairings for the eliminations Major Scott has requested that all teams rush their entries to him as soon as possible.

Ohio Winner In Track Meet

Chicago, May 18.—(AP)—Ohio State's strong track squad scored an unexpectedly easy victory over the athletes from Chicago, Northwestern and Wisconsin here today in the annual quadrangular meet by rolling up 73 3-4 points. Chicago was second with 43, Northwestern third with 31 1-3, and Wisconsin fourth with 28.

Led by Simpson and Rockaway, who were tied for high point honors with two victories each, Ohio copped ten places in the dash and hurdle events for a total of 35 points. Wins in the discus, hammer, broad jump and two-mile events provided the Ohio men with the marginal points.

A cold, driving wind handicapped the athletes. A field record was broken in the shot-put when Weaver, 230-pound Chicago tackle, tied with Behr, 160-pound Wisconsin halfback, in heaving the ball 47 feet 5 inches. Klein, of Chicago, who got third in the event, had broken the record the previous week.

Spartanburg Boss Draws Suspension

Spartanburg, S. C., May 18.—(AP)—Manager Mike Kelly, of the Spartanburg baseball club, has been fined $50 and suspended indefinitely by President W. B. Bramham, of the South Atlantic league.

The penalty was imposed as a result of Umpire Ben Mitchell's report to the president following the Greenville-Spartanburg game here last Friday. Protesting good naturedly, witnesses said, of three doubtful strikes called on a player, Manager Kelly was fined and put out of the park.

Mitchell accused him of inciting the fans. Catcher Cliff Knox will act as manager during Kelly's suspension, which local officials are trying to get removed after a presentation of both sides of the matter to President Bramham.

Welter Champ To Box Soon

Despite several cold water showers on a welterweight championship match for June, Joe Dundee insists a fight will be staged. After Al Mello had whipped Dundee twice in overweight affairs and the stage was set for a Mello-Dundee title go, the Boston Portuguese was soundly whipped by Gorilla Jones. But there still is a chance Mello will redeem himself and fight Dundee, the latter said in explaining himself before the Maryland boxing commission.

If not Mello then Jackie Fields, the National Boxing Association champion. It is hinted by Dundee's managers that he would prefer to fight Fields; that he always had trouble with southpaws like Mello.

Germans Study Athletic Methods

Dr. Theodore Lewald, a member of the German Olympic games committee, has come to America to find why America always wins in the international competition. He says:

"The United States is the foremost sports nation in the world. Since the beginning of the modern Olympics the United States has been the victor every time. Such a great achievement is due to excellent institutions and superior methods. We want to find out what they are."

TECH MERMEN TO BE FETED

Great Jacket Swimming Team To Be Entertained By Athletic Body.

Members of the varsity and freshman swimming squads at Georgia Tech are to be feted at the A. A. C. Monday night by the Tech Athletic Association, according to word received from Dr. Crenshaw, of that body last night.

The Jacket tankmen completed a fine season some week ago, opening their schedule on a northern trip which saw them lose to Princeton and take a second to the Navy in a triangular meet with the Middies and the Pitt Panthers.

On the swing home from this jaunt the Engineers stopped off at Durham long enough to take the Duke natators into camp, and from that date until the close of the season with the Georgia state meet at the A. A. C. pool, the Jackets took on and defeated some powerful teams.

The Georgia title and the conference crown were brought to the Flats by the varsity crew, and the affair this evening, a banquet with speeches and all the trimmings, is well merited.

The rats also had a successful season, taking the scalp of the Georgia rats twice in their only two meets with collegiate opposition, and running through the Atlanta High school slate with ease with the exception of a loss to the strong Boys' High squad.

Sixteen Classes To Be Shown in Atlanta Horse Show Saturday

Judkins To Judge Civilian Classes

Long List of Prizes Await Owners of Equine Stars in Intial Show.

By Ben Cothran.

Atlantans who like to see well-built, well-ridden horses in action in the show ring are just before being satisfied. Saturday brings the first show of the recently formed Atlanta Horse Show Association.

The show is to be held on the polo field at Piedmont park and will start promptly at 1 o'clock. There are to be 16 classes and each of them will be well filled from the class for ponies under 52 inches, ridden by children, to the jumping class. More Atlanta people than one would suspect, own saddle and show horses and are entering them in the show.

The Governor's Horse Guards will be represented 46 times in the show. That many horses are not entered, as some of the mounts are to be shown in more than one class. Bob Woodruff will have 16 in the show. Fort McPherson will send in a large entry. It is not known exactly how many are coming from the army post. Most of those who will ride in the show or enter mounts are at Fort Benning for the polo week-end and will not make entries until this week.

Judges Named.

Trammell Scott, secretary of the association, Saturday named the judges for the show. Holland B. Judkins, who lived in Atlanta until a year or so ago, has been secured to judge the various classes. Judkins is a recognized expert on horses and will come here from New York for the show.

Judkins will decide in every class except three—the military divisions. This trio—officers' chargers, polo pony and enlisted men—will be judged by a nationally known horseman and authority, Colonel Fitzhugh Lee, who is stationed at Fort McPherson. Homer Thompson, Atlanta horseman, will act as ringmaster.

An ample ring will be erected for the show. It will measure 250 feet in length and 125 feet in width, affording plenty of room. Captain Theodore Goulsby, of the Horse Guards, and Lieutenant F. del Comfort, of Fort McPherson, are in charge of the ring. A detail from the Horse Guards will act as ushers and also have charge of getting entries into the ring.

One of the best jumping rings ever seen in any southern horse show is expected to be in action Saturday. Outside of polo, no horse work offers more thrills than the jumping class in a horse show, and some of those entered for Saturday will provide thrills aplenty.

TWO JUMPERS.

From the stables of Bob Woodruff come two jumpers—Querida and Sinn Feiner. Querida is a little mare from Texas who looks more like a walk-trot horse than a jumper. But, as one Atlanta horseman said after seeing her in action, "she goes over the bar like a bird." Her motion is easy and smooth and she gets over the highest. Querida will be ridden by Mrs. Blink Drummond, of Fort McPherson, one of the south's best horsewomen.

Lieutenant Ray Love, of the Horse Guards, will jump "18," from the Horse Guard stable. "Eighteen" was uncovered some two years ago when he took first place in a show here, beating out many good hunters. The horse is a natural jumper, likes the business and will be hard to beat out.

These horses will compete in the open-to-all, and before a winner is decided the bar will be some distance up in the air.

TICKETS MOVE.

Ticket sales have been brisk during the past week with a big demand for box seats, which indicates that a good crowd will be on hand Saturday. Tickets are on sale at Penelope Penn's, Rich's and at Trammell Scott's, on North Broad street.

Numerous trophies have been offered by Atlanta firms, organizations and individuals. There will be a cup for the winner in each class. The Capital City Club will present a beautiful silver trophy to the best horse in the show.

Chicago Sends Huge Crowd

Churchill Downs, Louisville, Ky., May 18.—(Special.)—Just how Chicago has adopted the Kentucky Derby as its greatest civic habit is shown by the fact that 3,700 came to the Downs today by train, airplane and motor to see the Derby.

The delegation from the Windy City occupied whole sections of the reserved grandstand and clubhouse boxes. Seventeen special trains, 10 extra cars on regular trains and 10 "second sections" on regular trains is the measure of the railroad movement.

TANGEMAN FAR AHEAD IN S. E.

Pensacola Outfielder's Consistent Slugging Places Him Ahead.

Outfielder Tangeman, of Pensacola, remains at the head of the Southeastern league batsmen, being far in front with an average of .470. Tangeman's nearest rival is Catcher Johnson, of Jacksonville, who is hitting at a clip of .412. Johnson, however, has batted in the most runs, 27.

Bourg, Jacksonville firstbaseman, tops the base stealers with a total of 11. Leslie, Selma firstbaseman, is the home run leader, his total circuit clouts being 3. Jacksonville's batting average of .328 is the best in the league, with Pensacola ranking second with a mark of .316. Tampa is fielding the ball better than any of the other teams, having an average of .963. Jacksonville comes second in team fielding with an average of .959.

Phelps, of Jacksonville, is the only pitcher in the league who has won 5 games and lost 0. Pitcher Moulton, of Montgomery, is the second best hurler, he having won 4 and lost 0.

Semi-Final Gained In Emory Meet

Sigma Pi and Sigma Chi teams advanced to the semi-final round in the Pan-Hellenic baseball tournament at Emory university by victories this week. These two teams will meet to decide the finalist in the upper bracket. In the lower bracket Chi Phi, Sigma Nu, A. T. O., and Phi Delta Theta are undefeated.

The Sigma Chi team turned in the prettiest game of the year up to date to defeat the Kappa Sigma team, 7-2, Saturday afternoon. Stockman pitched a brilliant game, striking out some 15 men. He was given excellent support by his teammates, only one miscue being chalked up. In the meantime the team was hitting Hodges, the Kappa Sigma pitcher, surprisingly hard. Stockman with a home run, and Gordon with a triple, led the attack.

The Sigma Pi team took a double-header Friday, defeating the A. E. Pi team and then eliminating the Delta Tau Delta crew. Rennie pulled the iron man stunt and pitched both games. Although somewhat wild he kept himself out of trouble.

Chi Phi has previously defeated S. A. E. and A. T. O. downed Pi K. A. In the closest game of the tourney Kappa Sigma defeated K. A., 2-0. In the first round Delta Tau Delta defeated Pi Kappa Phi, 9-5.

fair on Friday obscured by low hanging rain clouds.

Backers of Clyde Van Dusen and Upset Lad found consolation in the ability of their choices to go well in the mud, but the holiday aspect of this greatest of American turf spectacles was spoiled in a measure by the downpour.

Taxi drivers were demanding $40 for the round trip between the city and Churchill Downs. Police hid their resplendent new uniforms and perspired in heavy slickers as they guided the splashing traffic.

The mist increased the inevitable congestion on the roads leading from Louisville to the Downs, many Derby fans postponing their departure from town until what they considered the last possible moment.

There was some surprises early in the day when no scratches were announced at the 7 a. m. call-over and for a time a record field was anticipated with 26 colts and geldings and one filly named overnight, but during the morning, owners of horses who had no chance began to withdraw their entries.

TIGERS LOOM AS CONTENDERS IN AMERICAN

Club's Showing Against Yankees and Athletics Prove Its Greatness.

George Moriarty,
Big League Umpire.

(Copyright, 1925, by the North American Newspaper Alliance.)

New York, May 18.—As a rule it takes a baseball club of unknown quality at least a few months to prove its possibilities. Not so Detroit. Six days were all it required to show that its machinery was properly geared and oiled for the struggle toward the pennant.

It is the same club which was beaten eight out of ten games by the Chicago Cubs in the spring exhibitions, but if these teams met today I believe the result would be entirely different.

May 10 to May 15 held a world of meaning for Detroit. Enter this team now as a serious pennant contender. After the dynamic New York Yankees had swept clean at Chicago and St. Louis, Detroit set them back two out of three. Then followed the powerful and well-balanced Philadelphia Athletics, to receive the same rough treatment. Taking the two series in a clean-cut way from these two whanging outfits was no kindergarten effort.

STRONG OFFENSIVE.

In front or behind Detroit traded punch for punch at all times. The club is now plunging along with an offensive whose power may surpass that of the team under the Jennings regime, when Cobb, Crawford and McIntyre kept opposing outfields on the run.

Philadelphia was in front of Detroit 6 to 0 and 9 to 4 on two occasions, and then won by only the narrow margin of 10 to 8, with three Detroit runners left stranded on bases in the ninth inning. It was like old times to see outfielders throwing out runners at the plate in those games.

Outfielder Johnson, of Detroit, is gifted with a remarkable arm for speed and accuracy. One admirer paid him this compliment: "Put a milk can on home plate, and Johnson will hit it from deep center field." That is not much of an exaggeration when one sees him throw. Johnson has an odd throwing style. Most outfielders throw over-handed, but he chucks the ball out from his hip. With a poor throwing arm this would be considered bad form, but when you see him Lindbergh the pellet high and true as a taut clothes-line to the mark, criticism is uncalled for.

FAST ON BASES.

Johnson also is fast on the bases, and some day, because of his great speed, he should scamper on the paths a la Max Carey. Johnson has more Simon-pure energy than any outfielder I have seen since Cobb was in his prime.

In the rush to distribute credit where it belongs in the Detroit club, it would be an injustice to leave Catcher Ed Philips out of the picture. Count him as a classy and clean-cut catcher who may be relied upon to do his share of the thumping when a batting rally is on. Philips' snappy style behind the bat reminds one of Jimmy Archer, except that Philips does not throw from a squatting position. And just to delve into the unexpected for a moment, who would have dared prophesy that Carl Hubbell, of the New York Giants, would be batted out of the box upon his appearance following his magnificent no-hit performance?

FT. MAC, HORSE GUARDS BEATEN

Columbus, Ga., May 18.—(Special.)—Fort Benning's first string polo team defeated the Governor's Horse Guards in a six-chukker game here this afternoon. The score was 7 to 3.

The Horse Guards were out-mounted and playing without the services of their captain and back, Lieutenant Wesley Moran, who was unable to make the trip. Hansard, substituting, played a very good game.

The field, after yesterday's rains, was fairly fast but rough and the ball was hard to hit. Love, with a beautiful stroke, scored one of the Horse Guards' goals with a difficult angle shot.

In a second game, between Fort McPherson and Fort Benning's second team, the second-stringers made it unanimous for Benning with a 5-2 victory. McPherson was led by the hard-riding Franke and Comfort and fought stubbornly from the beginning. Benning got off to a lead, however, that McPherson could not overcome.

The teams play again tomorrow, McPherson meeting Benning's first team while the Horse Guards play the second team.

Columbia Crew Again Winner

New York, May 18.—(AP)—Columbia's great rowing fleet scored its third clean sweep in as many weeks on the Harlem today with the Massachusetts Institute of Technology as the victim.

After the 150-pound freshmen and junior varsity crews all had turned victories over to their New England rivals, Columbia's varsity boat load ploughed to an overwhelming triumph over M. I. T., by five and a quarter lengths. The Lions jumped away to an early lead and gradually increased this margin all the way down the mile and three quarters course. The time was 8:16 3-5.

The clean sweep followed upon similar triumphs at Derby over Yale and Penn and at Princeton over Princeton and Penn.

Davis Cup Play

Copenhagen, Denmark, May 18.—(AP)—Greece and Denmark divided honors in the first pair of singles matches today in the third round of the European zone Davis cup play. Zerlendi, of Greece, defeated Ulrich in a turbulent four-set duel, 8-6, 8-6, 7-5, 17-15, but Hendrickson, of Denmark, evened the count by beating Safiropoulo, 6-4, 6-4, 6-1.

Italy Wins.

Dublin, Ireland, May 18.—(AP)—Italy made a clean sweep of its Davis cup tie with Ireland, taking the last two singles matches today. Baron H. L. De Morpurgo, Italy, defeated McGuire, 6-0, 5-7, 6-4, 6-2, and De Stefani, Italy, downed Rogers, Ireland, 4-6, 7-5, 6-2, 7-5.

The SPORTLIGHT by Grantland Rice

THE LONE EASTERN BARRIER.

The far west has been cleaning up the east with fairly steadily regularity through late years. Stanford or California or U. S. C. has been taking charge of the intercollegiate games at Cambridge or Franklin field. Last summer California's big crew rowed away from the rest in the east, at Poughkeepsie, and then in the Olympic eliminations. California will soon be headed east again and if California is to be stopped the answer seems to be Columbia. Glendon's fast crew has already shown enough speed. If it can stand up under the four-mile test there will be something to watch at Poughkeepsie, where at this moment the entire show seems to be Columbia and California. If Columbia's fast crew can stop the far western charge there is small likelihood that any other university can turn the trick.

THE HARDER GOAL.

Recently some 250 golfers met at Muirfield and Gullane to qualify and decide the fate of the British open.

It is a far different story over here, where the goal is much harder to reach.

Over here there are 8,000,000 square miles to be accounted for. In place of 250 entries there will be something between 1,100 and 1,200. It is for this reason that qualifying rounds must be played in many different sections—north, south, east and west.

There will be just one lone survivor on the afternoon of June 29, and he will be the survivor of some 1,200 shock troops.

Walter Hagen has accomplished a marvelous performance in winning four British opens, but winning the U. S. open is now the high spot in golf.

It is the toughest of all golfing jobs. In addition to all the star professionals there will be such amateurs as Bobby Jones, George Voight, George Von Elm, Chick Evans, Jess Sweetser, Harrison Johnston and others to consider. Over here it is not so much a battle against the elements. Cold winds and rains rarely attack a June tournament.

The fact that no golfer has repeated over here for seventeen years, shows how strong the barrier is. To be the sole entry left out of 1,200 starters from the best in the game is something to shoot at.

MICHIGAN AGAIN.

Dear Sir: Michigan is leading the western conference baseball race. Michigan usually does just that. It has a great coach in Ray Fisher, the former Yankee and Red pitcher. Michigan develops the best players in the conference, but few of them ever go in for professional ball. Michigan's athletic system discourages its stars making athletics a profession.

RUD.

ROCKNE'S ANGLE.

Dear Sir: They were telling this Rockne story at the Ohio relays. When Elmer Leyden, fullback of the Horsemen, finished school, he came to Rockne for advice. He was undecided as to whether to take up coaching or become a bond salesman.

"What are the requirements of the jobs?" he asked Rockne.

"To be a successful bond salesman," Knute replied, "you have to be well dressed and dumb. To be a successful coach it is not necessary to dress quite so well."

RED T.

Dear Sir: Now that you are keeping bees, why not challenge Warren Brown to a race with his roaches. Warren staged a famous roach race in Youngstown several years ago and has some speedy ones. Such a race would amuse the boys when they grow tired of following Horton Smith in the open at Winged Foot.

F. J. P.

For that matter there may be a few of the boys also following Bobby Jones and Walter Hagen. They seem to have done fairly well in this respect for the last ten years, where one usually needs a periscope to watch them swing at anything like close range.

A fanatic writes in to suggest that it might be just as well to keep an eye on St. Louis in the National league race. Why not? St. Louis won in 1926, came close to winning in 1927 and came back to win in 1928. Any team that Haines and Alexander pitching, with Frisch and Bottomley around the infield, is no slight part of a set-up. The Cardinal lineup may not quite figure with the Cubs, but it won't be so far away when the final standing of the clubs is thrown into print.

"You might think," writes H. K. F., "that with a million targets to shoot at we would get a better run of heavyweight than the game knows today. That much money usually draws out something to look at it." You might think so, but it wouldn't mean anything. Apparently most of the heavyweights can't see why they should be bothered with any real fighting for only $1,000,000. They'll take a bow for that much loose change, but not much more.

Sportsmanship Makes Or Breaks Athlete

Professional Makes Business of Sport But His Sportsmanship Is Spontaneous.

By Walter Trumbull.

New York, May 18.—You frequently see references to the professional in sport. There is no such thing. A professional may be, and frequently is, a better sportsman in spirit than the amateur, but, in fact, his game is his business. Sport, as a matter of true definition, is play, frolic, amusement, fun.

Earning a living from skill at games is a profession, and an honorable one. There is no quarrel with material rewards, if fairly gained. But no player of a game is remembered solely for what he made out of it. For professional or amateur there are intangible rewards, which rust can not corrupt, nor thieves break through and steal.

When Babe Ruth hits a home run, or Walter Hagen breaks a course record, I doubt whether either one of them ever pauses to think of what it may mean in dollars and cents. Man o' War, a professional, since he ran for money, certainly never thought of the purse as he came under the wire. Here are competitors, filled to the exclusion of all else with the will to win. Their fame will rest not on what they made, but on what they did.

Often in this game of life we do not recognize at the moment the effort which brings the lasting reward. There, for example, is Henry Strong Durand, who died recently in Paris. Shakespeare says, "The eagle suffers little birds to sing;" yet Dr. Durand, inventor of surgical methods, donator of parks, a man who had a distinguished, successful career, will be remembered mainly for a song.

FAMOUS SONG.

When an undergraduate at Yale, he wrote "Bright College Years," the last line of which runs, "For God, for Country and for Yale," claimed by Harvard men to be the greatest example of anti-climax in the English language. But it is that youthful anthem which will keep Durand's memory green.

And so it frequently happens that some pointed act of sportsmanship, impulsively made, will leave its mark on the sands of time to remain long after high built structures have collapsed and been washed away by the ceaseless rolling of the years.

The real rewards which sport offers are far beyond physical upbuilding or amusement and relaxation. Competitive sport is a futile thing unless it develops such qualities as courage, initiative, patience, self-sacrifice and leadership. The player who finds none of these things in sport derives neither pleasure nor profit from it. Unless sport teaches him sportsmanship, it would be of greater benefit to all concerned if he got his exercise in some other manner.

PROVING GROUNDS.

Watch a man in games and you will get a pretty fair idea of his character. The fields and tracks and stadia of a nation are more than mere costly places of entertainment. They are the proving grounds of youth.

It is there that you may see how the player acts in an emergency and how he reacts to victory or defeat. And have you ever considered the vast opportunity which games offer for observation?

In all the thousands of baseball, football and golf games played in a season, no two are exactly alike. New situations, new problems, new opportunities constantly are arising. No completer test of mechanical and mental ability could be offered. In the heat of competition, disposition and sportsmanship show themselves for what they are.

But fields of sport are more than proving grounds. There is no boy of any imagination who does not vision himself as the hero of a game. In his brightest dreams he brilliantly snatches victory from defeat and hears the excited plaudits of the throng.

And if he has the heart and brain and the necessary stamina or strength or speed, and if he gets the breaks, some field of sport is sure to be situated in the land where dreams come true.

Outdoes Gene In Erudition

Speaking of well educated heavyweights turn your attention on Roy Burger, of Kansas. He finished Sterling college, is now at Heidelburg, and later will enter Case School of Cleveland. But he's still fooling around with the fight game.

Bowman Wins Tennis Title

Richmond, Va., May 18.—(AP)—Herbert Bowman, of New York, holder of the Bermuda title, won the tennis championship of Virginia by defeating John Millen, of Malden, Mass., in straight sets in the finals of the Old Dominion tournament, 7-5, 6-4, 6-1. Emmett Pare, of Chicago, who won the tournament last year, did not defend his title because of a foot injury.

In the doubles Crosland and Robinson, of Charlotte, N. C., defeated Bowman and Millen in straight sets, 9-7, 6-0, 6-3, to win the title. Bowman and Millen were practically exhausted from their strenuous singles matches and fell easy victims to the fine tennis displayed by the North Carolinians after first set.

In the mixed doubles, with Miss Penelope Anderson, of Richmond, the Bermuda champion, playing in rare form, Miss D. Rogerson, of Richmond, and Harold MacGuffin, of Philadelphia, went down to defeat before Miss Anderson and Herbert Bowman, 5-7, 6-1, 6-0.

MAX SCHMELING GOES OUTDOORS FOR TRAINING

German Boxer Pleased With New Jersey Training Camp.

By Tommy Loughran,
Light-Heavyweight Champion.

(Copyright, 1925, by the North American Newspaper Alliance.)

Philadelphia, May 18.—Max Schmeling, I see, will train for the Paulino fight at Bill Dwyer's big farm at Lakewood, N. J. This place was formerly owned by Philip S. P. Randolph, and is one of the finest on the Atlantic coast.

I have always been strong for outdoor training, and I particularly like to be near the sea. A lot of my preparations for bouts have been made at Wildwood, N. J.

One of the few fighters with a different slant on the matter is Tom Heeney. Tom always liked a gymnasium, and worked in one as long as he could when he was getting ready for Tunney. It took a lot of persuasion to get Heeney away from New York and down to Fair Haven. It took still longer for him to get used to the novelty of working in the open air.

I don't know how much outdoor work, aside from running on the road, Schmeling has done, but he expressed himself as greatly pleased with the surroundings at Lakewood.

Popular Place.

That stretch of the coast, which contains some of the finest summer homes in America, has always been popular with boxers. Years ago Jim Corbett trained in the Asbury Park section for his bout with John L. Sullivan.

The Schmeling-Paulino fight is scheduled for June 27, so the boxers will soon start intensive training. Victory means so much to each that neither will miss a chance to get in the finest possible condition.

There is some talk of pitting Paulino against Jack Sharkey if he wins, and more than a hint that Jack Dempsey himself may come back to competition next fall to take on Schmeling, if the German should be the victor.

Too Far Off.

However, September is quite a distance away. Lots of things can happen between now and then. I hope to do sufficiently well to force myself into the forefront and take the play away from the other contenders. My bouts with Ernie Schaaf and James J. Braddock will be definite steps toward that.

The old prejudice against boxers has died. Ringmen as a class are not looked on now as plug-uglies and ruffians. Most of them know how to conduct themselves in any company, and the best people are taking an interest in the game and the fellows who make it.

Such men as William F. Carey, Anthony J. Drexel Biddle, Jr., Richard Hoyt, James Bush, Matthew Brush and many others are financially interested in boxing.

YANKEES MAY LOSE "BABE"

BY GEORGE KIRKSEY.

New York, May 18.—One of the troubles with the New York Yankees these days is Babe Ruth.

Handicapped by an injured wrist, Ruth is playing far below form and the result is demoralizing to the entire Yankees' team. Unless Ruth's wrist shows improvement soon Miller Huggins may be forced to give him a badly needed rest.

"As Ruth goes so go the Yankees" is one of baseball's truest axioms. It is better for Ruth to be hobbling around the outfield or swinging "big Bertha" with one hand than to have no Ruth at all.

Ruth's injury prevents him from gripping a bat with any force and as a result he is popping up and striking out in the pinches.

With their weak hitting and weird pitching, the Yankees can ill afford to lose Ruth at this stage of the race, but it may be an absolute necessity if they are to have him later on when they may even need him worse.

Ruth will stay in the game ten times longer than the ordinary player. Few fans will forget his marvelous exhibition in the last world series when he played through the series with a lame knee which would have laid any ordinary athlete on the shelf.

In many quarters the belief is prevalent that this will be Ruth's last successful season in the major leagues. Ruth's play to date certainly is the basis for the conclusion that he is at least heading toward the end.

Granted that Ruth's wrist has handicapped him, it must also be acknowledged that injuries will play a large part in bringing Babe's career to a close. Ruth has always placed a tremendous burden on his physique and nature is certain to exact its penalty.

Bulldogs Defeat Tech in Final, 3-1

Georgia Works Fast Double Play in Second To Stave Off Rally of Jackets.

Athens, Ga., May 18.—The closing of the college baseball season saw Bill Parks in excellent form this afternoon as Georgia took the final game from Tech's Yellow Jackets, 3 to 1. The big Georgia right-hander gave up only five hits while his team mates were hammering Powell and Little for nine.

Georgia has won three games out of four this season from Tech. A 9 to 5 defeat yesterday marring their record against Coach Clay's charges.

Four sparkling double plays contributed a great deal toward the lowness of the score, each team making two. In the second inning Tech had three men on base and none out when Parks fanned Hutchison and Herron hit a hot grounder to Davenport. Davenport threw to McGaughey who tagged second and made a brilliant heave to Rothstein to double Herron at first. Mizell, who was on third, had crossed the plate when Rothstein caught the ball at first, the double play thus saving the Georgians. This same combination, Davenport to McGaughey to Rothstein, did it again in the fourth inning although there was no imminent danger.

FAST DOUBLE PLAY.

With two on base and none out in the fifth, Shorty Smith grabbed Herndon's liner to double Davenport off first. Again in the sixth Mizell caught Day's attempted bunt and doubled Rothstein off first by throwing to Terrell.

While Parks was the master of the situation almost all the time Lefty Powell was continually getting into trouble and he was lucky to get out as light as he did. Georgia got four men to third base, two with none out only to have them die there. Tech's two double plays saved them several runs, it is safe to say. The Georgia twirler had the Techsters waving their bats in thin air quite often, striking out nine. He fanned Hutchinson, Herron and Powell in rapid succession in the fifth inning.

The Bulldogs scored two runs in the first inning. Chafin singled to center but was forced at second by Davenport. Herndon slammed one to center field for three bases to send Davenport home and himself scored as Steele laid down a bunt along the first base line. After this the Bulldogs threatened time after time but did not come through until the seventh Gorman singled, Parks walked and both advanced a base as Chafin sacrificed. Davenport rolled out, but Gorman came home when Frink erred on Herndon's hard hit grounder.

JACKETS SCORE.

Tech only run came in the sixth inning when Warner Mizell tripled down the first base line to score Terrell who had singled. Little had the Georgians under better control than did Powell, allowing only one hit but two errors and a base on balls counted against him.

Georgia and Tech have now played 20 baseball games since they resumed athletic relations in 1925. The Bulldogs have won 13 of these games while Tech has taken the remaining seven.

Weis Hitting at Tremendous Pace To Keep Southern Lead

Al Lopez Leading League in Homers

Rosenfeld, Recent Cracker, At Top in Stolen Bases—Atlanta Third in Team Batting.

Outfielder Weis is doing quite a bit of sensational hitting for the Birmingham Barons these days, topping the Southern batsmen easily with a mark of 445. Weis is far ahead of his nearest rival, Blakesley, of New Orleans, who has amassed a percentage of .413.

Blakesley and Pickering, Birmingham third basemen, have batted in the most runs, each having a total of 23 to their credit. Max Rosenfeld's departure from the Southern Saturday calls for a new leader in stolen bases, as Max was leading in that division with a total of 11. Although he clouted no homers during the past week, Al Lopez, of Atlanta, continues as the circuit clout leader with five.

Birmingham is at the top in team batting and at the bottom in fielding. The Barons lead at bat with a mark of .332, while Memphis ranks second with .286. Memphis moved into first place in fielding, having a percentage of .968. That mark, however, is hotly contested by Nashville and Atlanta, those two clubs having fielded at clips of .967 and .965, respectively.

E. May, of Memphis, tops the pitchers. He has won five games and lost none.

Max Bloch, Metropolitan opera tenor, will be guest soloist of the Atwater Kent concert to be broadcast over WSB and a nation-wide N. B. C. system tonight at 7:15 o'clock.

MAX BLOCH.

This concert, the second of the new summer series, was especially prepared to be in tune with the rare days and evenings of which the poets sing. The soloist, Max Bloch, is one of the younger and more lyric of the Metropolitan opera tenors and his contributions to the evening will be of a romantic type. He sings as his first number the famous old ballad, "I'll Sing the Songs of Araby," and will follow this with Guy d'Hardelot's equally well-known "Because," which was one of Caruso's best-known ballads. In his second group the soloist will present "Duna," usually heard as a baritone solo, and "Caruso's song, "Dreams of Long Ago."

Three dashing concert compositions in dance form, or rather of the type known as concert dance numbers, since they are not intended for dancing but to give the sprightliness and dash and brilliance of dance form to the composition, will be included in the orchestra program. These are "The Dancing Doll," by Poldini; the "Dance of the Chinese Doll" and the "Dance of the Clowns" from the "Christmas Tree" suite of Rebikov. Each of these compositions is well known to radio listeners and as arranged by Pasternack for the Atwater Kent orchestra should be presented in a striking manner.

Something different in the way of broadcasts, in the shape of a four-in-one contrast program, will be presented by the Majestic Theater of the Air tonight at 7 o'clock over the Columbia system.

Wendell Hall, master of ceremonies of this popular hour, conceived the idea of dividing the hour into 15-minute intervals in accordance with the breaks in for station announcements. He believes that the ideal radio hour should be made up of four concentrated and highly contrasted forms of entertainment, each complete in itself. The last few moments of the fourth period, the finale of the hour, should gather up the four threads of thought and weave them into a whirlwind coda.

The first Majestic four-in-one program will open with a musical delineation of the march—including such stirring tempos as are found in "Over There," "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers," "Dance of the Paper Dolls" and the familiar "Wedding March." The second period will be built around a fleeting radario with a "black out" finish called "Martini Was Right," which abounds in hilarity and amusement.

Following "Martini Was Right," the third quarter of the Majestic hour will offer another direct contrast. After winding up the alarm clock, Wendell Hall drifts away into dreamland with the theme melody, "My Dream Sweetheart." While still charmed by these musical visions, he is awakened by the clanging alarm, and so, refreshed by sleep introduces his fourth contrast, a most strenuous performance, Wendell Hall's "One-Man Vaudeville Show." The "Red Head" will amuse and surprise listeners with and by his clever versatility, and then in true master of ceremonies fashion will bring the hour to a close with a musical resume of what has gone before and a final "Good-Night, Ladies," by the quartet.

The four-in-one program of contrasts will be constructed from such superlative talent material as the Arnold Johnson orchestra; Redferne Hollinshead, tenor; Harriet Lee, the melody maid; the Majestic Male quartet; Monroe Silver, creator of "Cohen on the Telephone;" and to complete the musical picture, the red-headed music-maker, Wendell Hall himself.

The complete program is as follows:

Peter Biljo and his Balalaika orchestra, who play regularly in Around the Samovar, will present a medley of Caucasian songs as a feature of this hour over the Columbia system tonight at 8:30 o'clock.

This medley will consist of a collection of popular folk songs that come direct from the Caucasian mountains. They are typically Russian in character, and have been specially brought together and arranged by Mr. Biljo. Other selections that this orchestra will play consist of "Waiting," a waltz, and Glinka's "Mazourka" from "A Life for the Czar."

Miss Kazanova will lend her violin to the playing of "'Tis Not the Wind Bending the Trees," featured by John Barrymore in his presentation of "Redemption." Madame Nicolina will sing "Northern Star," a folk song in praise of the beauty of Russia, and Eli Spivak will sing a modern Russian song entitled "I Laugh Today" as additional features of this interesting Russian hour.

Radio Leader

C. B. SMITH.

Buying characteristics of the radio public are about as different as day over night, C. B. Smith, president of the Stewart-Warner Corporation, said Saturday.

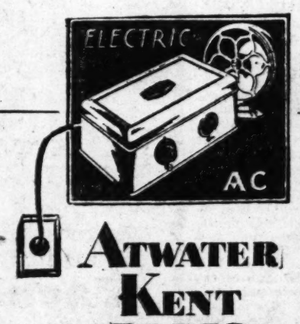

The variance in ideas, according to Mr. Smith, ranges all the way from the grain of the wood in the cabinet to the hookup and assembly in the chassis.

"The successful radio manufacturer is the one that has struck the happy medium to conform with the fancies of the buying public," said Mr. Smith. "The receiver with the punch of a champion is the one that meets the most exacting of these requirements.

"To anticipate the demands of the public, the manufacturer must be in advance of the times. He must build a machine with more thought of its permanency and up-to-dateness over a period of years rather than building with no thought of the future.

"For instance, Stewart-Warner's recently introduced '900 Series' is furnished with amplification stages applicable to television, even though television today is in an uncertain stage of development. When it is perfected Stewart-Warner receivers will not be obsolete."

The vast resources of the Stewart-Warner Corporation, according to Mr. Smith, are now being concentrated in an effort to reach a record-breaking production basis this year.

CROUCHER IS ZENITH CHIEF IN SOUTHEAST

H. W. Croucher, assistant to the sales manager of the Zenith Radio Corporation and for some time past located in Chicago, has been assigned as southeastern territory manager for the same company, with headquarters at James K. Polk, Inc., 217 Whitehall street, southeastern distributor for Zenith radios.

Mr. Croucher is widely known here by reason of the fact that he has spent considerable time in the recent past developing Zenith's organization in this section. He is a veteran in radio, having during the past 10 years been associated with every line of the industry. He has conducted a radio magazine of his own, been a wireless operator on board ship, operated his own broadcasting station, served as European radio correspondent for a big American newspaper and has had extensive experience in the selling end of the business. For the past six years he has been connected with Zenith.

"My first trip south was made for Zenith in January," Mr. Croucher said Saturday. "At that time I was greatly impressed with the fine type of citizens here, and my admiration for them has increased steadily. I am delighted to be assigned to the southeast. It was my territorial selection and I believe that Zenith products will meet with great success in this section because they are quality radios built for quality folks. If I meet with the same cordiality from a commercial standpoint that I have encountered in a social way, Zenith will find its proper place and position in the southeast."

H. W. CROUCHER.

HOPKINS LEAVES CITY TO ATTEND RADIO MEETING

W. D. V. Hopkins, president of the Hopkins Equipment Company, state distributors for Atwater Kent radio, has left Atlanta for Philadelphia to participate in the dedication of the mammoth 16½-acre extension of the Atwater Kent Radio factory. This new plant, Mr. Hopkins said, which gives the Kent factory a floor area of 32 acres, doubling in size and capacity what already was the world's largest radio manufactory, will specialize in the production of the new screen grid receivers—the latest in radio development.

The elimination of difficulties in summer reception, due to improved receivers and the use of increased power by transmitters, as recently explained by Dr. J. H. Dellinger, chief of the radio section of the United States bureau of standards, Uncle Sam's radio authority, is expected to be reflected in a sustained demand for radio equipment throughout the present summer, according to Mr. Hopkins.

U. S. WILL STUDY RECORD IN TRIAL OF MICHAELSON

Miami, Fla., May 18.—(AP)—Possibility of further prosecution of Congressman M. A. Michaelson, of Chicago, on charges growing out of his testimony during his Key West trial on charges of importing liquor loomed today as the government won its first move to obtain a record of the Key West testimony.

Judge Halsted L. Ritter signed an order at noon impounding notes taken at the trial. He refused, however, to grant the government's request that counsel for Michaelson be restrained from preventing sale of the transcript by their court stenographer.

The government did not make a stenographic report of the Key West testimony, but under the court's ruling it will be possible to make limited use of the defense report.

Forests of equatorial Africa are so largely composed of hard woods that when soft wood is needed for building purposes it has to be shipped from Europe or America.

Bits of Broadcasts

"The Toy Shop" is to be presented on KOA, Denver, Monday night, May 20.

Roxy's male quartet is to be the feature of his next Monday night program.

A tonal description of life on the Mississippi river is to be the high light of the program by the United States navy band on WABC and chain Tuesday evening.

The next broadcast of "Harbor Lights" by WEAF and chain will consist of an adventure of the World War days when Captain Jimmy Norton was kept prisoner aboard a German submarine.

Wendell Hall will give a "one man vaudeville show" in the theater of the air Sunday night over WABC and group. This program is to be divided into four parts of which the vaudeville show will be the last.

They said it couldn't be done —and then came

THE NEW
STEWART-WARNER RADIO

"You've got to sacrifice one thing or the other," they told us. "You can't have clearness and volume and distance, all in the same radio set. You've got to sacrifice something." But Stewart-Warner went ahead without regard to anything that had ever been done before.

They developed an entirely new circuit. A "balanced bridge" circuit utilizing the most powerful tube equipment known to modern radio—two new UX-245 power tubes in "push-pull" with five 227 heater type tubes.

The result is a set that provides tremendous volume. Without distortion. With amazing realism of tone. And extreme distance-getting ability. Performance beyond anything you have ever listened to. Beauty that will give you a genuine thrill. Modern!—even to plug-in connection for Television.

It couldn't be done. But here it is—the new Stewart-Warner—"The Set with the Punch"—the punch that knocks out all former standards of radio reception. The punch that brings distant stations booming in with unmatched realism of tone.

Nothing less than a full demonstration can give you a real appreciation of this modern, 5-years-ahead Stewart-Warner Champion. See the Stewart-Warner dealer today. Small initial payment puts the Stewart-Warner in your home.

WALES, HAGEN WIN IN MATCH

Prince and American Down Foes by Score of One-Up.

Swinley Forest, Eng., May 18.—(AP) In a golf match shrouded by the deepest mystery, the Prince of Wales, with Walter Hagen for a partner, won a golf match today from Sir Philip Sassoon and Aubrey Boomer, British professional. The match, a foursome with selective drives, was won one up.

The most careful arrangements were made to keep the match a deep secret, even the name of the course where the play was to be being consealed.

When Boomer and Hagen left their London hotel by a side entrance and stepped into a motor car, they did not know where they were going.

They were driven swiftly to Swinley forest, which is near the famous Ascot race course and only a stone's throw from Sunningdale, where the prince has taken a house for the summer.

Arriving at the course, they were met by the prince who had preceded them and played a few holes with his equerry, the Honorable Piers Legh.

Swinley forest is the property of Lord Derby. It is known in London as the millionaires course, but it is of the simplest character. The clubhouse bonsts no waiters and the members help themselves to lunch from the sideboard and pour their own tea, just as they would at an early morning breakfast at an English country house.

Tales of Wayside Tee

"No wonder the average golfer is confused," writes L. P. M. "We are told in one breath that the action of the body leads the down swing, and in another breath that it is important not to let the body get in front of the hands and the arms and the action of the clubhead. Under these directly contradictory statements what is the poor duffer to do?"

These statements in actual fact are not contradictory. When the back swing is completed, with the weight transferred largely to the right side, the first downward movement does not come from the hands and arms. It comes with the body turning back in place as the left heel settles upon the ground again. You can say that the elbows lead this forward movement, or that the body leads it. The hands, arms and clubhead do not. But as the left heel settles back into place, getting ready to support the blow, it is then that the hands, arms and clubhead take charge. The body, having turned just so far doesn't keep advancing forward ahead of the swing. For a brief instant it holds its place to permit what Jock Hutchinson calls the movement of hands and arms "independent of the body." The body starts back around, but it doesn't keep on going. It merely turns far enough to permit the hands and arms to take up control of the swing from that point on. They take control, independent of the body, which after that merely supports the swing by backing up the hands and arms and going forward with them until as the ball is hit almost the entire weight is on the left foot.

The trouble with most golfers comes from overzealous action of the body. Through overtenseness it helps to block the natural turn or transference of weight on the back swing. Through overeagerness it goes too far in helping the down swing.

In place of starting to turn back and stopping in time, it moves on so far ahead that the hands and arms have no chance to get the clubhead through at top speed.

The body undoubtedly leads the hands and clubhead on the down swing as it turns slightly back to the left side, just enough to give hands and arms a chance to work. But in most cases it doesn't stop at the right spot. It keeps on going. If the weight is largely on the left leg and foot at the top of the back swing, then the body has no other move to make except to fall backward for the down swing, thereby killing all power in the punch.

It might be remembered that there can be no power when the hands are hitting one way and the body weight is moving in another direction. They must take the same direction and work as a team, not as a set of rival forces. If the body is allowed to turn naturally and comfortably to the right, without interfering with the correct transference of weight, a big part of the trouble will be removed.

But in most cases the body is allowed no such opportunity. Through lack of balance or too much tension it begins to block the work of the hands and arms from the start. It is bound to block the work of the hands and arms if the weight on the back swing is held upon the left leg and left foot. Once the down swing has got under way, the position of the body must be such that the player can then use his hands and arms to hit with the clubhead, just as one hits with the head of a hammer. Golfers who don't throw the body in too far ahead of schedule often throw the right hand too far forward, and this latter maneuver can do just about as much damage as any other mistake in golf. The body will turn naturally and keep its place if allowed to work its own way where there isn't too much tension to tie up the stroke.

Drawing Card.

Jack Sharkey has taken part in six fights which drew more than $100,000 each. They were with Dempsey, Stribling, Maloney, Heeney, Wills and McTigue. The Dempsey fight drew $1,083,000.

Told His Brother; Revenge Is Gained

When Cy Chisholm, manager of the Fayetteville club of the Eastern Carolina league, fired a bat boy out of the park he thought no more of it until he was socked on the chin by Jess Wellons, a boxer, next day. Jess was the bat boy's older brother.

Ready for Try at Indianapolis

Indianapolis, May 18.—Leon Duray, Herculean race driver who at 35 is a wind-blown veteran of speed, who stirred dust on dirt tracks with Oldfield, DePalma, Disbrow, Endicott, Clark and other old-timers, continues to race in the hope of building a passenger car embodying the lessons he has learned on the track and of winning, just once, the Indianapolis 500-mile race, speedway classic.

Duray captains a three-car team in the international race at Indianapolis, May 30, his latest try for enduring racing fame.

Married for 15 years and the father of a 12-year-old son, Glenn, who attends military school in Los Angeles, Duray began racing in 1916 as a member of Alex Sloan's hippodroming squadron which raced over a period of years on every fair grounds track in America.

It was in these early days that Duray learned the lessons of skill at high speed that has made him one of the most spectacular drivers of the speedways and enabled him to hang up outstanding speed records.

In those halcyon days of racing, Duray was paid a bonus for thrilling fair goers by nicking pickets off the outside fences of the tracks on which he was competing.

Duray, therefore, feels completely at home in his tiny race car flipping along at 130 miles an hour with cars all about him in a traffic at times that is as congested as a good country road on a sunny Sunday afternoon. Thirteen years of the "roaring way" have given him steel nerves.

Last May, in qualifying his car for the race, he drove the fastest lap in the history of the Indianapolis track. He negotiated the two and one-half mile brick and concrete oval at a gait of 124.018 miles an hour in a tour that racing experts declare was the finest piece of driving ever seen on the track, establishing a record that is likely to remain for many years.

Duray also has driven the fastest lap ever driven on any speedway, board, brick or dirt in cars of any size or class. He drove on a testing oval, a two and one-half mile course, at a rate of 148.178 miles per hour.

Appearing at Indianapolis for the first time in 1922, Duray has been a front runner in every race, but never has he finished a contest. Always something goes wrong with his car. One year, when he was in an enviable position, an insignificant bracket on his gasoline tank broke. He has consistently collected money from the $20,000 lap prize fund which provides $100 for the driver leading in each lap of the competition.

Duray would like to retire and build a passenger car he has in mind.

"Racing is dangerous," he explains. "I have my wife and family and a home in California. I want to retire and build my idea of a passenger car, designed through lessons I have learned in my many years of racing. For years I have been racing with that end in view. After this year's Indianapolis race I will be ready."

Although Mrs. Duray attends every race in which he competes and would prefer to have him in the stands beside her rather than out on the track, booming through the turns at daring speeds, she never asks him to retire. That's up to Leon.

Boxers Make Good As Business Men

There Is No More Fighting But Much Protecting of Titles.

By Robert Edgren.

New York, May 18.—And champions used to fight to see which was the better man! They used to fight winner take all, including a side bet. They were content to really "risk" their titles. They didn't want a contract on the side that would protect them from possible loss and reward them for being licked. In fact, if one of the old-time champions, like John L. Sullivan, James J. Corbett, Bob Fitzsimmons or James J. Jeffries had been accused of making fight terms in the 1929 fashion they promptly would have walloped their accuser on the nose. They would have felt disgraced by a suspicion that they could possibly be so entirely lacking in sportsmanship. They had pride in their profession and they weren't "sure thing" men in their line.

John L. Sullivan, champion for many years, met Jim Corbett, youthful challenger, on a basis of winner take side stakes and all emoluments of any sort whatever. He didn't try to trade his title for a sure thing payment if he lost it in the ring, or to rig up some scheme by which he couldn't lose it even if the decision went against him. After being knocked out by Corbett, Sullivan didn't have a nickel, and he had lost the world's championship—the thing modern business men posing as fighters always refer to as their "asset." Corbett, risking nothing but a punch on the jaw, won the world that day on the turf at New Orleans. I mean it, saying that Corbett risked nothing but a punch on the jaw—unless you include the money of his backers, which they were perfectly willing to risk on Jim's chances. He didn't risk losing his reputation for a fighter, for it would not have been counted a disgrace to be knocked out by Sullivan, the invincible terror of the ring, in those days. Losing, Corbett could have gone right along fighting, even with added reputation as a man who had fought Sullivan.

CORBETT RISKED ALL.

Corbett fought Bob Fitzsimmons at Carson, Nev., March 17, 1897. He risked his title. He risked the chance of being beaten by a middleweight champion knowing there'd be an added sting in such defeat. He knew his friends and his brothers would be betting on him, and perhaps he sent Harry Corbett a little money of his own to bet that he'd beat Fitzsimmons. Beside that he fought under a contract calling for a "fight to a finish, winner take all." They were all sportsmen in those days. Not stallers. There had to be a winner in a finish fight. This was the last heavyweight championship fight to a finish, winner take all. Fight customs changed a little afterward, and the Corbett-Fitzsimmons affair was a bit of a carryover from the London prize ring days of Sullivan and the champions before him.

Jim Jeffries beat Fiztsimmons. He fought Fitzsimmons a return match later. He fought all the best men that could be found to fight him. Finish fights called "prizefights," the limit was usually 25 rounds. The purse in Jeffries' day was usually split 75 per cent to the winner, 25 per cent to the loser. Sometimes it was 60-40, but never 50-50 or with an agreement giving the champion the big end even if he was whipped. And certainly never with a side contract giving the champion all the money if he was whipped and forcing the challenger to "do nothing if he won and in addition pay the champion a bonus for doing."

QUEER AGREEMENT.

There was a very queer agreement about the money when Loughran "risked his light-heavyweight title" in a 10-round bout with Middleweight Champion Mickey Walker in Chicago recently. As reported, Loughran was to be paid the entire percentage allotted to the two fighters by the club. He was to pay Mickey Walker $50,000 if Walker lost; only $10,000 if Walker won. Mickey could hardly be blamed for making a good start and then coasting along to lose a decision, when it meant being paid $40,000 for losing. The trick title was hardly worth $40,000 to him, when he could still go on as middleweight champion in much easier competition. Perhaps Mickey didn't "coast"—but many people think he did and it was a perfectly sound business proposition. That's what most of the modern champions like—a sound business proposition. Sport? Forget it!

Even more astonishing, as an example of right up to date business methods, is the contract said to have been arranged for a bout between Tod Morgan, junior lightweight champion, and a challenger, Baby Sal Sorio.

According to terms published it seems Morgan was to take 60 per cent of the gate receipts. If Morgan won or drew he was to pay Sorio 10 per cent. If he lost the decision he was to keep the entire purse or percentage, paying Sorio nothing, and in addition to that, was to get $10,000 in cash from Sorio. Yes sir, Sorio was to be penalized, if he had the nerve to defeat the champion, by getting no money and digging into his own bank account to hand over $10,000, more to pay for the trick title he would received.

UNIMPORTANT.

The junior lightweight championship is of little importance. It was invented by Tex Rickard to boost the gate receipts in little fights between men who weren't at their best in the recognized lightweight class. The junior welter class is another such joke championship. Carried out, the junior title idea would wind up in having championships at each pound of weight—the 130 pound title, 131 pound title, 132 pound title, etc. Perhaps even to half pound limits. Then we'd have the 131 1-2 pound champion, 132 pound, 132 1-2 and so on.

Tod Morgan is a dandy little fighter. Handling his own "business," probably he'd be quite willing to take a sporting chance like the old timers. But that wouldn't be the modern way. Perhaps if he did take sporting chances he'd lose the title—a catastrophe, as the average manager counts it, akin to going bankrupt in the business world.

There are so many queer ways of protecting titles, and so many more about to be invented by timid and cash-hungfry managers of boxers, that unless the various state boxing commissions step in with a needed reform, boxing will soon be tossed out of public regard as a sport. Boxing commissions should adopt a stock form of contract for all boxing contests, and penalize the making of queer private agreements by permanent disqualification of both fighters and managers. The contract should provide simply for a "contest," under conditions fair to both the contestants and the public, and there should be fixed percentages of the purse to the winner and the loser. By no twist should the loser be allowed to take the winner's end.

Every other sport in the world gives the gold medal to the winner and the silver medal to the one who finshes in second place. The fiction that every boxing contest is an "exhibition" died out when state laws all over the country recognized boxing contests."

Gibson Is Released.

Jacksonville, Fla., May 18.—(AP)—Charles Gibson, a catcher, has been released by the Jacksonville club of the Southeastern league and made a free agent at his own request. At the same time Alan Mobley, catcher, recently of the Knoxville club of the South Atlantic Association, was signed by Tars. At the time of signing up he also was a free agent. Gibson's release was the result of not reaching a satisfactory salary agreement.

Answer.

CIGARETTES PRODUCE BIG INCOME FOR U. S.

Washington, May 18.—(AP)—Taxes on cigarettes brought into the treasury for April $28,832,122 or more than one-quarter of the total of internal tax receipts for the month, which were $96,481,365.

The bureau of internal revenue in its monthly report today noted that for the ten months of the fiscal year including April the taxes on cigarettes had mounted to $275,993,052, against $246,067,705 in the corresponding period of the previous fiscal year. The consumption of cigarettes was indicated to have been during April 9,608,900,000 individual cigarettes. In the same month last year the cigarette consumption indicated by the taxes was approximately 7,600,000,000 cigarettes.

The tax receipts indicated that cigar and tobacco consumption was also considerably higher during April than during the same month last year, but the income from snuff taxes dropped off slightly.

The total receipts of internal revenue for ten months including April of the present year amounted to $2,233,660,012, against $2,169,926,904 in the same ten months of last year. Though the cigarette tax has increased steadily during the period, the main reason for the larger tax collections was disclosed by the comparative statement of income tax receipts, which for the ten months ending April 30 this year have run to $1,735,582,741 while last year they were $1,662,128,147.

TWO CHILDREN RESCUED FROM SUNKEN CAVE

Cave Dug by Waycross Children Collapses — Imprisons Them.

Waycross, Ga., May 18.—(Special.)—Emily Stewart, 10, and Billy Corbett, 11, barely escaped a horrible death here yesterday when they were rescued from a collapsed cave dug by neighborhood children under the Stewart home on Williams street. They are recovering today, physician report.

Buried under two feet of loose earth, the little Corbett girl was rescued about five minutes of digging, but Emily Stewart, who was buried more than three feet, and whose exact location could not be given by playmates who sounded the alarm, was not recovered until after 15 minutes of frantic digging. Both girls were believed to be dead when extracted from the cave, and it was only through the work of L. B. Green, a neighbor, assisted by Jack Culbreth, Roy Culbreth, Tom Culbreth and others, that life was restored.

Resuscitated.

Artificial respiration methods were employed. Billy Corbett soon responding to the efforts of her rescuers, though bruised and blistered from the ordeal. Emily Stewart was apparently lifeless, and considerable effort was necessary to restore breathing. She was practically paralyzed, seriously blistered from the intense heat, and bruised in many places.

Billy Corbett is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Corbett, 415 Reed street, and Emily Stewart is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Stewart, of 512 Williams street. They were digging in the play-cave, under the back part of the Stewart home, several of their neighborhood friends witnessing the collapse of the cave. When the collapse came they shouted to the cook in the Stewart kitchen, and aid was summoned.

L. B. Green, a neighbor, and Jack Culbreth were the first to respond, and their heroic efforts are regarded as responsible for the saving of the two lives. Working under difficulty because of their cramped position under the house, and with little information as to the exact position of the bodies, they used their hands and a shovel to scoop the dirt away. Presence of mind in the application of artificial respiration by Mr. Green, revived them soon after they were recovered from their threatened grave.

THE CONSTITUTION'S REAL ESTATE REVIEW

CONDUCTED IN THE INTEREST OF DEVELOPMENT OF ATLANTA AND THE SOUTH

FIRST LEASE ON PEACHTREE AND CAIN SITE IS CONSUMMATED

Decide on 3-Story Building For Baptist Church Corner

Liggett Drug Store Is Tenant in $225,000 Deal Handled by Burdett Realty Company.

Lease of the corner store in the commercial structure to be erected on the site of the old First Baptist church property to Louise K. Liggett Company nationally known chain drug store operators, was announced Saturday by Arthur C. Burdett, of the Burdett Realty Company, agents in the transactions. The aggregate rental was $225,000.

Announcement of the transaction marks the first lease to be consummated on the Peachtree and Cain streets corner property and indicates definitely the adoption of plans formerly announced to improve the corner with a three-story coommercial building.

Size Determined.

The parcel, containing the old Baptist church and located on the southeast corner of the important intersection, was bought more than a year ago by the Edward C. Peters, of the Peters Land Company, from the church. Dismantling of the large stone edifice required a number of months, and was just recently completed.

Because of the high value of the property, speculation was rife since purchase of the corner by Mr. Peters as to the nature of improvements to be erected. Shortly after acquiring the parcel Mr. Peters stated the tentative plans were to erect an attractive three-story structure, divided into a number of stores on Peachtree street. It was thought that this type of development would be the most productive on an income basis. At the same time frequent reports had it that a large multi-story structure was intended for the site, although credence to these reports were never forthcoming from officials of the Peters Land Company.

With announcement Saturday of the first lease on the corner store to Liggett comes confirmation of the tentative building plans originally suggested by Mr. Peters.

To Take Four Months.

Work on the structure is to be started immediately, with Pringle and Smith as architects. It is expected that the building will be completed in about four months with possession of the corner store to be taken at that time by Liggett. The site of the building will have a frontage of 80 feet on Peachtree and extend back nearly 100 feet. The ground floor will be divided into three stores, having frontage on Peachtree street and including the corner store, a double store in the center and a third store adjoining the new Singer Sewing Machine Company's new building.

The Liggett Company will occupy the ground floor with 20 feet frontage on Peachtree and 100 feet on Cain. It is understood that negotiations for lease of other portions of the building are under way and in some instances nearing consummation.

Other new leases announced by the Burdett agency Saturday consisted chiefly of office space and brought the total figure to more than $300,000.

Other Leases.

Among these were the following in the Henry Grady office building: To A. & M. Karagheusian, Inc., of New York, 1,000 square feet on the fourth floor for the southeastern branch office in rugs and carpets; to Lang & Foote, 3,000 square feet additional space; to the General Accident Fire and Life Assurance Corporation, of Perth, Scotland, 800 square feet for southeastern United States branch office, and to the Mohawk Carpet Mills, Inc., 400 square feet additional space.

Offices were leased in the Grand building to Dr. H. G. Bowden, Consolidated Sales System, Mrs. Genevieve Covington, E. B. Noble, Mrs. May Porter, Mrs. C. V. Burton, E. C. Guthrie, F. L. Beddingfield, H. C. Crews, Hamilton Black, H. H. Hickman, Mrs. J. D. Denton, Mrs. B. Elliott, J. Jones and Miss Athleen Rohrer.

Other commercial leases included for Guthman's Laundry to Crowe & Perry, storeroom at 111 North Pryor street for jewelry store; for Eugene V. Haynes to W. M. Otey Company, 10 North avenue; For Sylvan Point Company to Entrekin & Renfroe, 3,000 square feet warehouse space at Murphy avenue and Sylvan road; for the Underwood estate to Duffell Motor Company, vacant lot at 416 Peachtree street; for Carl Witt to Burrough's Adding Machine Company, 850 square feet additional space in Witt building, and for T. H. Simmons to a client, 11,000 square feet of space in building at 714-16 Ponce de Leon place.

BANKER AND BOY RESCUE GRIFFIN GIRL FROM WATER

Griffin, Ga., May 18.—(Special.) Miss Willie Childers, 15-year-old freshman at the Griffin High school, was rescued from the waters of the Country Club lake yesterday afternoon, when she was going down for the third time, by Gilman Drake, president of the First National bank, and Newton Crouch, 15-year-old high school boy.

Members of the freshman class were enjoying a picnic at the Country Club. Mr. Drake and other friends were playing golf at the green near the lake. Attracted by the struggles and screams of the girl, Mr. Drake dived into the water and he and young Crouch pulled Miss Childers out as she was sinking for the third time. Due to the noise the other children were making the rest of the party had not heard the girl screaming. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Childers and a popular high school student.

THURSDAY MEETING PLANNED BY BOARD

Officers and directors of the Atlanta Real Estate Board will hold their monthly dinner meeting at the Atlanta Athletic Club at 6 o'clock Thursday night, according to John J. Thompson, president.

At this meeting data regarding the annual convent of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, which will be held in Boston, June 25-28, will be submitted. Different routes will be discussed and plans made for obtaining a representative attendance from the Atlanta Board at Boston convention. The convention is expected to be well attended, as many nationally prominent speakers will be on the program.

The names of 15, or more, new members will be submitted for election to the real estate board.

Real estate subjects pertaining to the interest of the members will be taken up for action and a full attendance is expected at this meeting, President Thompson stated.

FEEDS CONTINUE DOWNWARD TREND

Prices of most feeds at the principal distributing markets continued their downward trend during the week ending May 16, largely as the result of a seasonal slow demand, good pasturage and declining grain prices, states the Grain, Hay and Feed Market News Service of the United States bureau of agricultural economics. Prices of feed grains were about unchanged from a week ago, but the hay markets were dull, with slow demand.

Wheat mill feeds, high protein feeds and alfalfa meal were generally quoted lower than a week ago, but corn by-product feed prices were unchanged. Prices of cottonseed cake and meal declined at most markets, reflecting a slow demand for ample supplies. Offerings, however, were generally light but mills were reported gradually making concessions in line with options. Thirty-six per cent protein cottonseed meal in carlots was quoted at Atlanta on May 14 at $35, and 41 per cent protein meal at Memphis at $35.50 per ton. Hulls were weak at Atlanta at $14 per ton.

Production of cottonseed cake and meal for the first nine months this season totaled about 2,176,000 tons, or about 147,000 tons more than in the same period last year. Consumption in those months, however, due largely to smaller foreign takings, was less. The heavier production and smaller consumption this season to date have resulted in a large accumulation of seed, cake and meal at mills. April receipts of cottonseed fell off sharply from the March receipts, and with fair crushing activity, mill stocks of seed were reduced nearly 200,000 tons.

Stocks Still Heavy.

They still remain about twice as large as at May 1 last season. About 107,300 tons of cottonseed cake and meal were produced in April and as the result only a fair demand, stocks were reduced about 14,000 tons to 225,362 tons.

This tonnage is the largest May 1 stocks since 1926. Shipments into trade channels during April totaled 120,984 tons for the month, compared with 107,545 tons in the same month last year.

The feed market continued slow in the southeastern states and buying was largely of a hand-to-mouth nature. Soft winter wheat bran was quoted at Atlanta on May 14 in carlots, bagged, cash-on-delivery at 30.50-31.50; brown shorts 36.00; gray shorts 36.50-37.50; No. 2 alfalfa meal 34.50; hominy feed 40.00 and corn feed meal 38.00 per ton. Hard winter wheat bran was quoted at Memphis on the 15th of May on the same basis at 24.50, middling 27.50, gray shorts 29.00; corn bran 30.00 and hominy feed 32.50. Bran was selling at Montgomery at 30.00; standard middlings 33.00; gray shorts 34.50-36.00 and red dog at 42.50-44.00 per ton.

Prices Decline.

Prices of feed grains declined sharply early in the week, largely on account of the weakness in wheat, but by the close of the week advanced to level equal to those of a week ago, as the result of unfavorable planting weather in important producing sections. No. 3 yellow corn was quoted at Chicago on May 15 at 87-88c and at Kansas City 86-87c per bushel. No. 3 white oats were quoted at the same markets at 45-47c and 45 1-2-46 1-2c per bushel respectively.

The hay markets continued seasonally dull with the demand restricted by the unusually favorable pastures and offerings fully equal to the current needs. Demand for hay at Atlanta was light although inquiries for dairy alfalfa were very active. U. S. No. 1 alfalfa was quoted at that market at 32.00-46.00 and U. S. timothy at 24.00 per ton. The movement of hay to Montgomery was of too small volume to establish a market. Rains continued to delay cutting and proper curing of the new alfalfa hay. Dairy type alfalfa from Oklahoma was being offered at around 32.00 per ton.

BARTOW OFFICERS GET TWO STILLS AND FIVE MEN

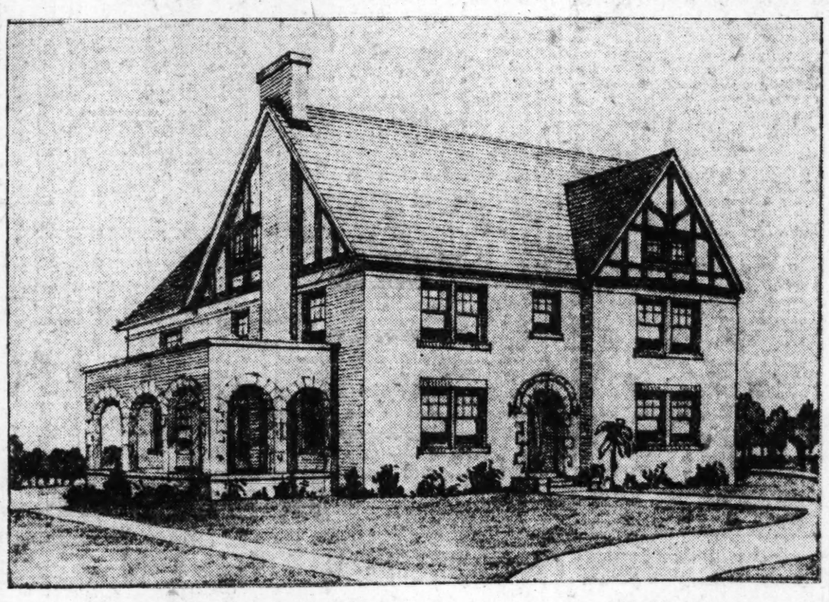

Cartersville, Ga., May 18.—(Special.)—Sheriff George Gaddis, of Bartow county, and his deputies hauled in two more stills during the week, seizing one in the Center section near the Fred Lewis home and another in the Pleasant Valley section.

Out of the two raids officers captured five men, Jeff Jenkins, James Guyton, Leonard Guyton, Homer Bagley and James Clark. Four of the men made bond while James Guyton pleaded guilty before Judge Claude Pittman of the Cherokee circuit at the special session of court, and was given a fine of $100 or six months.

The raid near Center resulted in the seizure of a 100-gallon still, eight gallons of whisky and 200 gallons of beer and the raid at Pleasant Valley netted 75 gallons of beer.

DAY IN FINANCE

By R. L. BARNUM

General Trade Activity During Last Week Indicated by News Coming into Stock Exchange.

New York, May 18.—This week's news indicated a continuance of general trade activity. Some slowing down in automobile production was reported, partly seasonal and partly because of the recent high production. But weekly freight car loadings for the third consecutive week were again above the 1,000,000 mark, a record for this time of year; recognized spokesmen for the steel industry reported that both buyers and sellers were surprised at the continued high production and demand; employment in manufacturing industries in April was reported above March for the first time in eight years with April wages higher than March for the first time in five years, an excess of no less than $1,060,000,000 in foreign trade exports over imports was reported for the 10 months of the government's fiscal year against $564,000,000 for the corresponding period of a year ago and $250,000,000 three years ago; for the same period we imported $101,000,000 gold whereas for the corresponding months of the previous year we lost $236,000,000.

From Wall Street's viewpoint there is only one cloud in the sky, high money. Call money advanced this week from the opening of 7 per cent to 15 with short term time money holding firm at 9. Many people in and out of Wall Street are firmly convinced that existing trade activity is the result of orders placed when money was cheaper and that from now on it will only be a question of time until high money slows down general business. This viewpoint was expressed by the president of the Pennsylvania Bankers' Association in opening this week's convention at Atlantic City.

Similar Views.

Similar views were expressed in another way in this week's detailed report of the committee on recent economic changes, this committee being made up of President Hoover and such well-known men as Owen D. Young, John J. Raskob, Daniel Willard, working with over 100 economists, statisticians and sociologists under the direction of the natural bureau of economic research. In its conclusions the committee warned against waste of natural resources, transfer of credit in quantity from production to speculation, artificial price advances adding that "we cannot maintain our economic advantage or hope to realize our economic future unless we consciously accept the principle of equilibrium, and apply it successfully in every economic relation."

There is no mistaking what that means. Nevertheless, the stock market ignored the foregoing warnings and also held remarkable strong in the face of the existing high money rates. Plainly the verdict of the stock market on the effect of high money on general trade and stock prices as put by one large stock exchange house was that "high money is being generally accepted as a matter of policy rather than a sign of trouble."

Gives Viewpoint.

This phrase apparently gives the viewpoint of those who believe that existing high rates for money are artificial, created by the unwarranted efforts of the federal reserve to curtail stock speculation.

However, this week's high rates for money was a condition, not a theory. What most people in and out of Wall Street want to know therefore is whether or not the federal reserve can continue to maintain its present policy and if so how long. This is the vital question because it is admitted on all sides that it will only be a question of time until the existing high rates for money slow down both the stock market and general trade.

In most conservative quarters here in Wall Street the belief exists that it is only a question of time until the federal reserve wins in its fight to check the use of credit in excessive stock speculations; that the country cannot continue to prosper unless credit is regulated by its recognized bank head; that curtailment of both general trade and stock speculative activities will prove a blessing in disguise.

Chain Store Official Tells Requirements in Location

BY PRESS HUDDLESTON,
Advertising Manager, Rogers, Inc.

(Delivered at the last meeting of the Atlanta Real Estate Board as the fifth lecture of the board's series.)

First let me give you some details about our chain organization and the kind of stores we like, the trouble we have in locating them, and the trouble we have frequently in trying to keep from taking them.

Atlanta, in my opinion, and it is the opinion of some of the officials of our company, has been overbuilt in the grocery store line. Until recently, since the zoning ordinance has become effective, there was a general skipping around and promiscuous building here and there, and our company has almost been forced to take locations sometimes that we really did not want or need. But a little group of stores would be built, nice little new stores, our competitors would take one, and more or less in self-protection, we would have to move in, although we were drawing business right away from our other stores within two or three blocks.

When you gentlemen consider handling property or renting property to chain stores (and I am speaking of grocery stores), keep this thought in mind: The main pulling power of a suburban store radiates about two blocks in each direction from that store. Of course if it is in a good, established trading section it radiates a great deal further. But taking the average trading point, two blocks in each direction is about the distance, which includes 16 blocks. If these blocks are fairly well built up this will average about 25 houses to the block. That would mean about eight on each of the four sides of the block. That will give you your 400 families and reasonable expectation from a chain grocery store that it could expect the amount of trade required.

Side of Street.

The location of a particular trading section and the location of the stores themselves, to their position on the street, means a great deal to the chain grocery. I do not know how many of you have ever noticed it, but if you will take note of it, you will notice that a great many, probably 70 per cent or 80 per cent of Rogers stores are located on the right-hand side of the street, as you go out from the city.

You can easily understand the reason for this. We try to get that kind of a location in every instance, but often cannot, and frequently, too, we have to follow in line with the row of buildings on which ever side they might be. But 80 to 90 per cent of our trade are women customers. Statistics show, and we have found out from experience, that a great deal of the shopping is done in the grocery stores by women on their way home in the evenings. They have been to town, the matinee, or picture show, or been shopping in the department stores or been to the bridge club, or somewhere, and they start home and the groceries will be the last thing they buy. They like to drive up, if possible, on the same side on which the store is located, and make their purchases. They do not like to cross the street. The same reasoning is applied also for the morning shopping. Women come down town in the morning to do their department store shopping and start back home, mostly in their automobiles, and stop by on the way home and make their purchases for lunch or dinner that evening.

Our heaviest trading hours are from 10 to 12 and from 4 to 6, the later period being the very heaviest of the day.

Parking Space.

Speaking of stores on the right hand side of the street brings up the thought of parking, and that has gotten to be a problem even out in the suburban community stores. The ideal chain grocery store in the future, and I believe the time will come before long when it will be realized to a large extent, will be a group of stores, perhaps built under the zoning plan, back in from the corner, set back from the street, similar to the filling stations, where there will be parking room. It does not take a grocery buyer long to buy her purchases and they only need parking ground for five or ten minutes at most.

As Atlanta grows and spreads in the years to come, and with it comes the spread of more stores, particularly grocery stores, more attention is going to be paid by owners and real estate men who handle the property, to the development of the right sort of community trading centers.

The whole trend of buying on the part of housekeepers has changed in the last few years. It used to be that we could put a little store out on most any street about 18 feet wide by 30 feet long, pack it full of goods, with two or three little lights in it and do the business. But that time has gone. Women love to trade where there are groups of stores, and it has reached the time now where stores have got to be larger, more attractive, better lighted, with attractive windows.

Store Center.

All of our stores lately run in size from 25 to 28 feet wide and 60 to 70 feet deep, giving us some store room in the back. These trading centers or community centers ought to be at least 7 to 8 blocks apart. That would make them plenty close in these days of automobile, to serve every customer. The little in-between stores and trading sections ought to be eliminated.

We like to get right in the midst of a nest of other stores. A customer will walk or drive right by a little store to itself to go up to a trading center because she realizes that if one store does not have what item she wants she can get it from another. She has a larger representation of stock to select from. Consequently these trading centers are going to be the chief trading centers in the years to come.

In representing your clients—the owners of property out in outlying districts of the city—be careful in your advice to them about the building of stores for a trading center, unless you have made a careful survey of that section, of its possibilities, and know whether or not the people in that community—the property owners—would like to have a trading center there. And when these important matters are settled in your mind, then plan the most ideal way to build community stores, keeping in mind that with the advent of the automobile conditions have changed all over the world, and that you must have parking room for customers. And there must be only a charge of such rental as a grocery store, operating on a smaller percentage than almost any other business, so that it can make a livelihood in that location.

Mizell Is Next Board Speaker In Sales Series

Mr. Mizell will talk on "What the Real Estate Men Can Do Towards Establishing Confidence in Real Estate As An Investment." Mr. Mizell is a member of the firm of Ward Wright & Company and is widely experienced in his calling. His appearance on the lecture program is expected to prove of great interest to the realty fraternity.

The speaker on last week's lecture program, which is being conducted to promote efficient and approved methods of selling real estate, was Press Huddleston, advertising manager of Rogers, Inc., whose long contact with the chain store development was utilized in a talk on this aspect of the real estate field.

Life Saving Course Begun At Riverside

Gainesville, Ga., May 18.—(Special.)—Several hundred cadets of Riverside Military academy, "the south's little West Point," now are learning what it is to be "at home in the water;" in other words, how to "keep their heads above water" and to help a fellow cadet who may have visions of a watery grave.

Captain Ramon S. Eaton, instructor of swimming and life-saving methods for the American Red Cross, is here this week giving a series of lessons and demonstrations to the Riverside cadets. Already he has enrolled over 100 students in his classes who are to stand the examinations for the rating of junior or senior life-savers.

This course in life-saving, according to announcement made by Colonel Sandy Beaver, president of the academy, is the result of activities of the swimming coach at Riverside during the past few months in teaching all the cadets who come to the school to swim.

The lessons and tests are being held in the academy swimming pool. The pool was built two years ago at a cost of $40,000, and was said to be the result of careful investigation of such equipment on the part of the school authorities.

BY JOHN P. BOUGHAN,
Associated Press Market Editor.

Chicago, May 18.—Wheat hovered around $1 a bushel here today for the first time in years, but just escaped crashing into the historic landmark of grain prices. Huge supplies present and prospective with no adequate outlet in sight operated as a constant drag, making the wheat market heavy from start to finish.

Closing quotations on wheat were unsettled, 1-8c to 1-2c net lower, corn 7-8c to 1 3-8c up, oats unchanged to 1-2c advance, and provisions varying from 10c decline to a rise of 2c.

Bottom-most prices reached this season were outdone today by au Chicago deliveries of wheat, with May down to the lowest point since 1915 and only an even cent above $1 per bushel. Before the market could drop any lower, though, the presence of numerous standing orders to purchase on declines was revealed, and rallies ensued, but were far from being snappy.

Particular notice was taken of announcement that winter wheat plantings alone in 17 countries having thus far reported showed an aggregate of 136,910,000 acres to be harvested this year against 131,582,000 acres in 1928. Special attention also was given to advices today from Kansas, the biggest wheat-producing state in the union, that general crop conditions for wheat were very promising.

Corn advanced in the face of wheat weakness. The principal reason was that wet weather prevailed over a large part of the corn belt, and that delays to corn planting were being intensified. Furthermore, a good-sized reduction of the corn visible supply total on Monday was expected. Cash demand was active, with sales to Montreal reported and loading of corn here for Quebec. Oats rallied as a result of corn strength.

All deliveries of rye paralleled the action of wheat, and sold today at a new low price for the season.

Provisions held about steady, influenced by upturns in the value of hogs.

New York, May 18.—(AP)—Convertibles held most of the attention in today's sluggish bond market. Price changes throughout most of the list were negligible, although there was a slight tendency to firmness.

In the stock privilege group, American Telephone 4 1-2s were noticeably easier. These bonds, which have sold as high as 142 on a when issued basis, were off nearly 2 points to 128 1-8 at the close for a net loss of 1 7-8 on the day. The turnover was heavy for the short session. Missouri Pacific 5 1-2s, popular in this week's trading, made a new top at 105 1-4, closing at that price on fairly large demand.

American I. G. Chemical 5 1-2s and International Telephone 4 1-2s lost small fractions. These and the other convertible issues traded on the bond division of the stock exchange have accounted for about 25 per cent of the volume of business in the last fortnight.

First grade rails were generally firm, while the secondaries and public utilities inclined to strength. Industrials were in small demand. However, interest in all groups was so slight that it was difficult to gauge price tendencies definitely.

The foreign sugar bonds, which have been selling at or near new lows, offered some resistance, although one issue, Cuba Cane Sugar convertible 7s, slid to a minimum for the year at 59, off one point.

Industrials showed few changes, but White Sewing Machines 6s sold into new low ground at 88.

United States government bonds moved irregularly higher on very light demand. The foreign list tended to work slightly lower with German Republic 7s equalling their year's low at 105. Leipzig City 7s were off 2 1-2 to a new minimum.

The $18,000,000 offering of Canadian National Railway 5 per cent equipment trust certificates was promptly sold.

REACTION CUTS COTTON ADVANCE ON WEATHER REPORTS

COTTON RANGES HIGHER OVER WEEK

The cotton market during the period May 11 to 17 was steady with slight improvement in prices. Domestic demand for raw cotton was reported good with inquiries centered mostly on the higher grades in the staple lengths 7-8 to 1 1-32 inch, with offerings these description very limited, due to scarcity in supplies. The result of this situation was that both the basis and quotations for premium staple cottons advanced further during the past week. Some reports indicated stocks in interior markets were rapidly being depleted.

According to the weather bureau, during the past week in the southern portion of the cotton belt, temperatures in general were rather favorable, but it was too cool in the north, while heavy rains were unfavorable, but it was too cool in the north, while heavy rains were unfavorable in many places west of the Mississippi river, especially in northern districts. The wet weather during March which delayed field work also retarded the sales of fertilizer, but sales have been much greater during April than usual, so that the sales of fertilizer tags in eight important cotton states for the season December through April are 96 per cent as great as for the corresponding period last year.

According to the bureau of the census, domestic consumption for April amounted to 631,710 bales (the largest April on record), compared with 524,765 for April, 1928. Consumption for the nine months ending April 30, 5,313,979 bales, compared with 5,306,459 for the corresponding period a year ago. Stocks on hand April 30 in consuming establishments 1,606,832 bales against 1,507,599 the same date last year. Apparant stocks of American cotton in the United States on May 1 were 4,400,000 bales, compared with 5,500,000 on April 1 and 5,200,000 on May 1, 1928. Exports to May 17 this season 7,500,000 bales, against 6,800,000 a year ago.

Quotations for middling 7-8 May 17, Norfolk 18.75; Augusta 18.69; Savannah 18.52; Montgomery 17.90; New Orleans 18.88; Memphis 18.15; Little Rock 17.60; Dallas 17.75; Houston 18.50 and Galveston 18.50. Average the 10 markets May 17, 18.32, compared with 18.02 May 10 and 20.55 the corresponding day the previous season. Sale of spot cotton in the 10 markets for the week, 42,721 bales, compared with 44,190 the previous week and 42,304 last season.

May future contracts at New York for the week advanced 12 points to 19.43, New Orleans 25 points to 18.84, and Chicago 11 points to 18.85.

Certificated stocks May 17—New York 166,086 bales, New Orleans 19,017, Houston 32,409, and Galveston 46,106.

Differences between middling and other grades of cotton were unchanged the past week.

Premium staple cottons wer said to have witnessed considerable activity during the past week with quotations further advanced compared with those of a week before. Interest seemed to have developed also in the medium and low grades, which, however, have not shared generally in the demand.

Southern mill centers reported increased demand coming from spinners for both prompt and later shipments. Cottons mostly in request were the medium and better grades in lengths 7-8 to 1 1-32 inches, inclusive. Both the asking basis and premiums for the longer lengths were said to have enhanced, with the result that reluctance developed on the part of buyers to meet advance quotations, which somewhat curtailed business. Demand for other low grades coming from southern spinners was reported as almost nil. According to the bureau of the census, the cotton growing states consumed to April 30 of this season 4,055,471 bales, compared with 3,946,483 the corresponding period the previous season.

Strong Demand.

New England mill centers reported a stronger mill demand and transactions larger than for some weeks, with the grades middling and strict low middling mostly in demand and inquiries now turning to the low grades. Yarn and grey goods markets were less active, but mill operations are going forward on full capacity basis. According to the bureau of the census, the New England states during the month of April consumed 131,809 bales, compared with 106,633 for April, 1928, and during the nine months ending April 30 1,070,946, against 1,136,209 for the same period last year.

Domestic dry goods centers reported that during the past week cotton goods continued quiet with buyers offers generally unsatisfactory.

The cotton textile industries of Germany and other central European countries appear to be only moderately active, while in Great Britain conditions appear only fair. Reports covering March and early April from Japan and China indicate that the textile industries there are very active and there is a strong demand for finished goods, although stocks of raw cotton, especially of the lower grades, are plentiful.

Foreign markets reported a slightly better situation. Liverpool said demand for actual cotton that market continued rather inactive with sales of American cotton for the week about 19,000 bales, compared with 22,000 the previous week. General market comments were favorable, and the labor dispute is causing some anxiety

Spot Demand Fair.

Manchester said that spot demand was fair, with inquiries for most grades and lengths of staple but in small quantities only. Southeastern staple cottons were said to be chiefly in the supply with good staple Texas cottons scarce. The American basis was reported as getting dearer, compared with that prevailing for cotton locally. Cloth and yarn business was disappointing but with rather more sales for India. Spinners were said to be experiencing increased competition. Outside intervention in labor dispute created full expectations of settlement.

Bremen reported the situation improving with merchants buying some new crop cotton. Little interest, however, was shown in old crop cottons The outlook in the interior situation was said to be better.

Havre reported that the outlook of port laborers past week had slackened business but that work started again during the latter part of the week, which led to expectations of a better demand due also to a firm market and rather heavy price fixing.

Milan reported Italian spinners now showing some interest for both cottons on the spot and later shipment.

FRUIT PROSPECTS UNDER 1928 CONDITIONS; PRICES FALL

PEACH CROP CUT BY BAD WEATHER

Recent reports on the condition of fruit crops indicate considerably lighter production than last year in most sections of the country. The Georgia peach crop may be relatively light. Supplies of apples in cold storage plants on May 1 were 10 per cent less than last spring and 20 per cent below the average holdings. Strawberries will be very plentiful this year, with a 25 per cent increase in the important intermediate states. Maryland and Missouri each expect over 30,000,000 quarts. Berry shipments were reaching their high average of 325 cars daily; all the leading states are now active.

Apple prices showed some improvement in large distributing centers, but prices of nearly all other fruits and vegetables were lower than the week before. Even potatoes lost part of their recent gains. Cabbage in barrel-crates declined at Mississippi shipping points to $1.25-1.40 and the city jobbing range on crates from several southern states was $1.75-3.25, stock from South Carolina was somewhat inferior, and sold below arrivals from other sections. The South Carolina season was about finished, and Mississippi and Virginia are now the leading sources.

Prices Fall.

Tomato shippers in southern Florida were getting only $2.75 per six-basket crate of fancy-count stock. Lug boxes in the lower valley of Texas returned $2.75, while four-basket crates brought $1.50. Texas' output increased to 250 cars and Mexican imports to 230 cars, but Florida shipments decreased to 650.

Movement of string beans increased sharply to 685 cars, mostly from Louisiana, Florida and South Carolina. Lettuce shipments, chiefly from central California, required 1,285 cars. Prices of lettuce around Salinas, Calif., ranged $1.85 to $2.10 per crate of five dozen heads; quality was only fair. Alabama cucumbers were starting and movement from Florida was still heavy. Citrus fruit continued to move in heavy volume. Combined shipments of the principal fruits and vegetables decreased slightly to 19,240 cars.

Peach Prospects.

The condition of peaches in 10 southern states—from North Carolina southward to Florida and westward to Oklahoma and Texas—declined to about 67 per cent of normal on May 1, compared with 74 per cent last year, 43 per cent in 1927 and 58 per cent in 1926. In Georgia, prospects declined sharply during April, chiefly as a result of rainy weather at blooming time. The May condition of this crop in Georgia averaged only 60, as against 83 a year ago and 43 two years ago. In Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas, prospects were still much better than for any of the last three years, ranging from 64 per cent to 80 per cent of normal in the three states, compared with 25 per cent to 67 per cent in May, 1928.

Citrus Fruit.

California citrus crop prospects are, at the present time, only slightly less favorable than at this time last year. Florida has been suffering from drought and, as yet, there has been only a very light set of citrus fruits. On May 1 the condition of Florida oranges and grapefruit was the lowest for that date in 12 years, indicating only two-thirds to three-fourths of an average yield per tree. Condition of oranges was 61 per cent and grapefruit 56 per cent of normal. Production and shipments of Florida citrus will also be reduced by the Mediterranean fruit fly quarantine.

Apple Supplies.

On May 1 there remained in commercial cold storage plants about 317,000 barrels, 2,231,000 boxes and 588,000 baskets of apples. Total holdings under refrigeration were 10 per cent less than those of a year ago and were 20 per cent below the average figure for May 1. The supply of apples in barrels was 21 per cent greater than last spring, but nearly 50 per cent less than the average of the past five years. Boxed apples had been moved rapidly and the remaining stocks were 23 per cent below the total on May 1, 1928, and 13 per cent below average. Bushel baskets were more abundant than in recent seasons. The May holdings in baskets was 28 per cent above last spring's figure and nearly 80 per cent greater than the average May supply of basket stock.

Prices of good apples were advancing slightly in quite a number of markets. Shipments decreased about 30 per cent from the record of the preceding week and totaled only 400 cars, about equally divided between eastern and western fruit. Approximately 126,000 cars of apples have already been shipped this season, as against 93,000 all of last season.

Potato Crop Reduced.

Not only was the acreage of early potatoes in nine southern states reduced about one-third from last year's plantings, but average yield per acre may be 10 per cent less than in 1928. The commercial crop in this group of states from Virginia to Georgia and westward to Texas, is forecast at only 20,065,000 bushels, compared with 32,739,000 last spring. Virginia, the Carolias and other leading states all show marked reductions, which should place early potatoes in a much more favorable position than a year ago. Virginia likely will have one-third fewer potatoes than in 1928; North Carolina and Louisiana a little more than half of last season's commercial crop, and South Carolina only about half of its 1928 production. Alabama expects less than half as many potatoes as last spring, and California's early crop may be only one-third that of a year ago.

Condition of the early crop in 16 states on May 1 averaged 83 per cent of normal, the same as this time last season. The crops in Alabama and South Carolina declined during late August, but improvement was noted in Texas, Mississippi and elsewhere. Highest condition figures were reported for Virginia, Maryland and New Jersey. Poorest condition appeared to be in Louisiana and Alabama.

New potatoes declined slightly in price, though shipments were somewhat lighter, totaling only 1,025 cars. Alabama increased to 320 cars for the week and South Carolina to 220 cars, but Florida dropped to about 300, Louisiana shipped 140, and Texas only 50 cars. Triumphs in the Mobile district of Alabama returned $3.35, sacked per 100 pounds. Growers in the San Antonio section of Texas were getting $3-$3.10 per 100 pounds of Cobblers. Bliss Triumphs from southern producing areas were jobbing mostly at $4-5 a sack, with best Florida Spaulding Rose at $6 to $8 per barrel and early arrivals of South Carolina Cobblers bringing $5.75-6 in New York.

Old Potatoes Lower.

Potatoes from northern and western storage were unable to hold their recent gains. Apparently prices had advanced faster than was warranted. FOB quotations in Maine and New York state declined about 20c per 100 pounds, and the north central region also weakened slightly. New York shippers had been getting as much as $1.30, but closing sales were at a range of $1.10-1.15, and price of sacked Green Mountains in northern Maine dropped to $1.20 per 100 pounds. North central states reported a range of 55c-70c.

Movement of old stock decreased very noticeably to 3,115 cars. Idaho started 540, the northern states 1,400, and Maine 610 cars. Eastern potatoes were jobbing in consuming centers at $1.05 to $2 per 100 pounds. The Chicago carlot market was lower on northern Round Whites at 70c-80c, while Red River Ohios held at $1 and Idaho Russets ranged $2-2.25.

Heavy Crop of Berries.

Seven of the intermediate strawberry states from Maryland, Delaware and New Jersey westward to Illinois, Kansas, Missouri and parts of California expect a combined crop of 108,641,000 quarts, or nearly one-fourth more than last year. Acreage was reduced but average yield was indicated at the high figure of 2,000 quarts per acre. The biggest gain is in Maryland, where 30,415,000 quarts are estimated, compared with 16,105,000 last season. Missouri expects a large crop of 33,480,000 quarts or 5,000,000 more than in 1928. Delaware and New Jersey show slight decreases to 12,000,000 and 13,830,000 quarts, respectively. Condition of the berry crop was very good on May 1, averaging 86 per cent of normal, compared with 77 per cent a year ago.

The Louisiana season was closing with a record of 2,900 cars to date. Last reports from the Hammond district on May 8 showed an average FOB auction price of $1.95 per 24-pint crate, which was some improvement over Monday's sales. Growers in North Carolina were getting $1.75-$4.75 per 32-quart crate, according to variety and condition of berries. The extreme jobbing range for Virginia and North Carolina arrivals in terminal markets was $3.50-6.50 per crate, or 10c-25c on a quart basis. The 24-quart crates from Alabama, Arkansas and Tennessee sold anywhere from $2 to $6. Louisiana berries, in 24-pint crates, brought $2-3 in large cities, or 8c to 14c per pint.

Shipments of strawberries increased to 2,180 cars by rail and 40 carloads by motor truck. Movement began in Maryland and Kentucky. Tennessee was credited with 680, Arkansas with 670 and Virginia with 340 cars. North Carolina, Alabama and Louisiana had decreased to 100 or 150 cars each.

Watermelon Prospects.

The watermelon crop in Florida and the Imperial Valley of California appears to be only a little heavier than last year's production in those areas, about 14,450,000 melons. General condition of this crop in five early states is much better than last season, averaging 80 per cent on May 1, as against 65 per cent a year ago. Improvement is especially noticeable in Georgia. Prices in the Leesburg section of Florida were ranging $325-500 per carload according to size of melons. Shipments increased sharply to 260 cars for the week, and movement will be heavier from now on. During the same week last spring only 10 cars moved. City dealers were getting the moderate range of 50c-$1.10 per melon.

Trading Only Moderate Due to Credit Situation

BY STANLEY W. PRENOSIL.
Associated Press Financial Editor.

New York, May 18.—(AP)—Wide fluctuations in call money rates caused a series of erratic price movements in this week's stock market. Many of the standard industrials and rails lost ground but several of the public utilities and sprinkling of high-priced specialties in which favorable developments are pending moved into new high ground.

Trading was only moderately heavy in volume. Several large operators, including Arthur W. Cutten, were reported to have temporarily withdrawn from active participation in the market. Others were reported to have merged their long positions with short sales of other stocks, adding to the confusion of price movements.

Call money ran up to 15 per cent on Wednesday, renewed at 14 on Thursday and dropped to 6 on Friday. No change was made in the New York and Chicago Federal Reserve banks, although directors of both institutions were reported to be in favor of a higher rate. Brokers' loans increased $14,000,000, the decline in stock prices being offset by the heavy volume of new financing.

Recent weakness of the copper shares was explained by the decision of some of the large producers to curtail output 10 per cent, presumably in order to stabilize the price of the red metal around 18 cents a pound. The copper stocks made good recovery after the news was out. Oil shares showed a tendency to improve in response to stiffening gasoline prices, and the publication of an excellent annual report by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey.

Entrance of General Motors into the aviation field by purchase of a 40 per cent interest in Fokker aircraft, and the successful flight of a plane equipped with Packard's Diesel oil-burning airplane engine were the most interesting developments in the motor group. Packard ran up to a new high and then reacted sharply, while General Motors made only a slight response to the Fokker announcement. Auburn Auto was run up in spectacular fashion to a new high record. Most of the other motors drifted lower on rumors that keen competition in the industry would reduce earnings, and probably bring about further price cuts.

Steel shares were rather sluggish, although production and consumption were maintained at a fairly high level. Several points of strength developed in the amusement, merchandising, chemical, tobacco, business machine and food shares.

United Corporation, the Morgan-Bonbright public utility holding company, ran into heavy selling after its recent spirited advance, but North American Company, American Water Works, American & Foreign Power, Detroit Edison and several others were pushed into new high ground.

General Electric was a spectacular individual feature, soaring to a new high record at 295 on Friday on persistent rumors of a stock splitup or a distribution of its investment holdings. Radio Corporation, on the other hand, ran into heavy selling most of the week.

COTTON GOODS PRODUCTION CUT

New York, May 18.—(AP)—Cotton goods production is beginning to ease off a little and the volume of unfilled orders is decreasing a little, sales have continued below the current rate of output. Reports from distributing centers state that trade has been held back by cool or wet weather and reordering has consequently been slow.

In the primary markets prices have eased a little on print cloths and sheeting and some business is being placed on contract for deliveries through the summer months. More business has been offered on special cloths for mechanical and other trade purposes.

There has been a steady flow of small orders on fine and fancy goods calling for deliveries well into the summer and in some cases to begin in July for the next spring season. Curtain materials, casement cloths and handkerchief fabrics in box loom weaves have sold quite freely.

A moderate amount of filling-in business has been done on voiles, broadcloths and some of the staple fine goods. Prices on 4-4 branded bleached cottons were reduced 3-8 cent a yard and substantial bookings were made on the few AC brands now distributed through the wholesale trades. Towels have been more active for immediate delivery and are reported to be selling freely in distributing markets.

Wash goods and printed fabrics continue to move out in large volume with new orders lighter. More business has been offered on summer underwear lines of a fancy character and fancy hosiery continues to move well in summer weights.

Prices current in primary markets are as follows: Print cloths, 28-inch 64x60s, 5 1-2 cents; 27-inch 64x60s, 5 1-8 cents; 38 1-2-inch 64x60s, 7 14 cents; brown sheetings, southern standards, 12 1-4 cents and 12 1-2 cents; denims, 2.20s, indigos, 17 1-2 cents; tickings, 8-ounce staples, 21 1-2 cents and 22 1-2 cents; prints, 9 12 cents; staple ginghams, eastern, 10 cents; dress ginghams, 12 12 cents and 15 cents.

RETAIL FOOD PRICES DECREASE DURING MONTH

Washington, May 18.—(AP)—Retail food prices decreased slightly during the month ending April 15 as compared with the previous month.

The department of labor placed the decrease at slightly less than 1 per cent since March 15 and about one-third of 1 per cent lower than on April 15, 1928.

Using 1913 as 100, the index number was 152.1 in April, 1928; 153 in March, 1929, and 151.6 in April, 1929.

NEW OFFERINGS IN BOND MARKET TOTAL $79,985,000

New York, May 18.—(AP)—New bond offerings for the week ending May 17 totaled $79,985,000, compared with $94,020,358 for the preceding week and $127,837,000 for the corresponding week last year.

COTTON MARKET UNDERTONE GOOD

A good undertone prevailed in the cotton market during the first two weeks in May with narrow price changes. Domestic demand improved perceptibly compared with that prevailing during March and April. Interest seemed particularly centered in the grades strict low middling to strict middling in the lengths 7-8 to 1 1-16 inches, inclusive. The better grades in the longer premium staple cottons were also considerably sought for with unsold stocks, however, of such cottons reported as very limited and offerings at considerably higher premium compared with those prevailing earlier in the season.

Low grade short staple cottons, as well as premium staple cottons, below low middling were said to be moving very slowly. Foreign demand during the first two weeks in May was reported as somewhat slower than that in evidence during the latter part of April. Cables stated that stocks of American cotton at European ports consisted of almost all grades and staples inquired for.

The average price of middling spot cotton in important markets of the first two weeks in May was 18.14c, compared with 20.71 for the corresponding period the previous season, and 18.94 for the month of April of the present season. On May 15, the average price of middling spot cotton in the 10 markets stood at 18.10c, compared with 20.43 for the corresponding day in 1928. The volume of sales of spot cotton in the 10 markets during the period under consideration amounted to 93,033 bales, compared with 98,140 for the same period a year ago. Total reported sales from August 1 to May 15 this season 5,829,774 bales, compared with 4,426,046 for the corresponding period last season.

The differentials between middling and other grades underwent but slight changes and on May 15 good middling stood at 43 points on middling, strict 30, strict low middling 75 points off middling, low middling 160, strict good ordinary 250 and good ordinary 340. A year ago good middling stood at 40 points on middling, strict middling 26, strict low middling 35 points off middling, low middling 77, strict good ordinary 143 and good ordinary 218.

Largest Consumption.

According to the bureau of the census, domestic consumption for the month of April amounted to 631,710 bales (the largest April consumption on record), compared with 524,765 for April, 1928. Consumption for the nine months ending April 30 5,313,979 bales, compared with 5,306,459 the corresponding period the previous season. Exports for the nine months ending April 30 were 7,197,652 bales, against 6,185,922 for the same period last season. Great Britain and Japan contributed about 550,000 and about 400,000

Mrs. Alfred Bailey Given Honors By Cause and Cure Conference

Mrs. Alfred Bailey, president of the Atlanta League of Women Voters, and first vice president of the Georgia League of Women Voters, has been signally honored by the conference on the "Cause and Cure of War," which has been called for Thursday, May 23. A table of literature, consisting of information concerning international peace, will be one of the attractions of the conference, and Mrs. Bailey has been invited by Mrs. Sinclair Jacobs, chairman of the Georgia committee on the Cause and Cure of War, to preside at this table. The literature, furnished the conference by various organizations, includes authoritative pamphlets issued by the National League of Women Voters. The national league's committee on international relations to prevent war, under the leadership of Miss Ruth Morgan, has provided a vast amount of informative and interesting literature which treats the subject from various angles, and delegates to Georgia's second conference on the cause and cure of war will be given an opportunity to examine the material next Thursday, in Egleston hall, for the first session of the meeting. Many prominent members of the Atlanta League of Women Voters have places on the program for the conference, including Mrs. Sinclair Jacobs, chairman; Miss Clara Nolan, who is chairman of the conference committee on credentials; Mrs. John Mullin, treasurer; Mrs. Harry Greene, chairman of conference publicity, and Mrs. Emmett Quinn, chairman of the committee on nominations.

Finance Activities.

The league stresses finance activity for the month of May, and results for the first half of the month are very encouraging. Donations have been received from a number of league members who have never before donated, as well as from many who have made contributions in the past. Mrs. Guy Lloyd Sink, chairman of the finance committee, is acting as hostess at 'finance tea' being given each Friday during this month at the league rooms in the Candler annex. These occasions bring together the group of specially selected workers who are lending their efforts during May to raise the league budget, in order that the work for the remainder of the year may be assured of progress and unhampered by financial need. Reports from the workers are offered and a resume of each week's donations is given. Mrs. Sink is assisted in entertaining by Mrs. W. F. Trenary, league chairman tof hospitality. Under the leadership of Mrs. Claude McGinnis, the ninth ward League of Women Voters will hold a rummage sale Monday, May 20. This sale is one of the varied activities being engaged in by the members of the ninth ward group during May, looking toward raising the quota assigned to that ward of the league budget.

Junior League Jottings

BY MRS. REGINALD FLEET, Editor

The "international question" which presented itself at the national conference in New Orleans, finally narrowed down to the handling of one specific case, that of Mexico City. It seems that, although many cities in foreign lands, even so far away as Budapest, have sent inquiries about the Junior league and its requirements for membership, only Mexico City had sent in a formal request for membership.

Heretofore it has been the policy of the national organization to issue a booklet covering the conference, but this year a special edition of the magazine will be brought out in July and will be a strictly Junior league edition with a full report of the conference. The question of foreign membership will be discussed fully in this issue. However, it may be of interest to know what procedure the national organization voted to adopt. The field secretary, Miss Forsyth Patterson, with a committee from the sponsoring leagues, will visit Mexico City. They will inspect from every angle the work and personnel of the applying organization. They will present their report to the region in which Mexico City would fall. If the yearly conference of this region passes favorably upon this report, a vote will be taken by the national board of the Junior league in which a unanimous vote is always a requirement.

The discussion of internationalism in the league aroused a great deal of interest among the conference delegates and was reported in the news dispatches from New Orleans at this time.

A marionette show on a complete marionette stage designed, built and decorated by Junior league members, with marionettes made by two Junior league members, operated by them, with a play written by a Junior leaguer, to be produced at the luncheon in June which will be the final meeting of the league for this year. Does not that sound almost too good to be true?

Inspired by the enthusiasm of their children over a professional marionette show, two of our enterprising members, Mrs. Wiley Ballard and Mrs. Trimble Johnson, conceived a plan which has resulted in the construction of the complete cast for "Jack and the Beanstalk" with the marionette stage in exact proportions. At the last meeting of the league, these marionettes were exhibited, the "enormous" giant with his ferocious face, an adventurous Jack which would suit the most exact imaginative picture of the character, his timid old mother, and a beautiful and delicately constructed fairy. When they were exhibited, they were so skillfully and beautifully made that the whole meeting broke into spontaneous applause and the greatest interest was aroused. Mrs. Johnson and Mrs. Ballard had no difficulty in organizing a committee of assistants.

A meeting was held at the home of Mrs. Ballard and a group of those who will take active part in the June production attended. They were Mrs. Ballard, Mrs. Johnson, Mrs. William Huger, Mrs. Bruce Woodruff, Mrs. Perrin Nicolson, Mrs. James Lenhart, Miss Carolyn Nicolson, Mrs. W. B. Disbro, Mrs. Bolling Jones, Jr., Mrs. Keith Quarterman, Mrs. Horace Rhorer and Mrs. Willis Ragan. It was decided that, after the presentation of "Jack and the Beanstalk" at the June meeting, several groups would be formed to make the marionettes and to dramatize one or two stories to be given in the fall. The High Museum of Art has offered the use of the new gallery for a performance. The theater is portable and can be set up in almost any place. It is also planned to give these shows at schools and at children's parties, the latter to provide one source of funds for the work of the league. In fact, "Jack and the Beanstalk" has already been requested for two such gay occasions.

What can be accomplished in this direction with a white cotton stocking, some cotton stuffing, some plaster of paris and some paint, some wool yarn for hair and some chamois for shoes, put together by painstaking and zealous workers, is perfectly amazing. The development of a group of puppeteers is one of the most important and most interesting things that the Junior league of Atlanta has done in some time.

Hs Four Women Hear It

Order of Alfonso XII Will Be Bestowed Upon Metropolitan Opera Co. Prima Donna During Forthcoming Week

THE KING OF SPAIN bestows the Order o f Alfonso XII during the forthcoming week upon Mlle. Lucrezia Bori, the popular songbird of Metropolitan Opera fame, an award of honor for the organizing and sponsoring of the benefit performance she staged at the Metropolitan Opera house in New York last November, realizing more than 250,000 pesetas for the fund being raised to construct the building for the University of Madrid. The little Spanish prima donna sailed from New York for Spain just one week ago—to receive the decoration and royal thanks from King Alfonso for her magnificent undertaking from which $50,000 in American money will be applied to the national university at Madrid. About 200,000,000 pesetas will be needed to complete the task, the contribution from Mlle. Bori winning instant recognition from King Alfonso, her beloved sovereign, whose popularity extends across the waters to American shores. During Mlle. Bori's last visit to Atlanta for the April song festival, a friendship of several years' existence between the charming diva and 16-year-old Miss Betty Myers, of Savannah, was revealed to Four Women. Possessing an innate love for music and a decided talent in both voice and piano, Miss Myers, also a sonneteer of no mean ability and who has at her command several foreign languages, became acquainted with Mlle. Bori at the Georgian Terrace, where she often visits her maternal grandmother, Mrs. Morris Rich. At this popular hostelry Mlle. Bori takes up her residence every spring, and here the friendship between the two has ripened into a genuine devotion, the prima donna having conferred upon her pretty girl friend the name of "Bettina." Despite the youth of Miss Myers, she is well-versed in the fine arts and holds up her own in conversation with cultured Mlle. Bori, speaking only in French or Italian when talking or reading together on the Georgian Terrace veranda and on the long motor rides traversing Fulton county roads.

Bori hears "Bettina" sing each year, always advising her not to sing in public or strain her voice, but to practice daily with infinite care and discretion, thereby strengthening the tone and preserving the sweetness of the quality of her voice. The little girl from Savannah is zealously following the advice of one whose every word is law, and who related to her the agony of the suffering she endured when forced to remain speechless for a year to regain her voice for grand opera a decade or more ago. When Bori sang the stellar roles here and always sends her maid Lucia out in the audience during intermissions to escort "Bettina" Myers to her dressing room, and they chatted together in a foreign language like two little magpies, Bori appearing no older than the 16-year-old girl to whom she has given her affection and whose companionship she enjoys to the fullest measure.

Mlle. Bori is under a ten weeks' contract to sing this summer at Ravinia, Chicago's open air opera project, and has leased the most charming of domiciles at Lake Forest, Ill., just outside of Chicago, built by the late Mr. and Mrs. Jack Dawson, whose sad death together in an airplane flying from Paris to Munich was the outstanding tragedy of its kind in local flying annals two years or so ago. This house has since then sheltered their children, who were left by their mother's written wish in the charge of her sister, Miss Maroussa Russell. The house is of Spanish architecture, which will make a peculiarly suitable and becoming background for this great Spanish prima donna. Besides being attractive, it has a separate little house which Mlle. Bori will use as her studio. A high wall protects it from public view and gives her pretty garden a most desirable privacy. She plans a series of house parties composed of distinguished folk from New York and other metropoli. She will motor to and from Lake Forest in a smart little yellow coupe up and down the suburban highways, her engaging personality being a brilliant addition to the community.

THE BEAUTY of glorious Italy, depicted upon canvas by that gifted artist, Signora A. J. Attillo Bolatti, wife of the Italian consul, is expressed in a painting hanging upon the drawing room wall of the executive mansion, a gift to Georgia's first lady, Mrs. L. G. Hardman, from the artist. The elegant profile of the four columns of the Temple of Castor and Pollux, in Sicily, overlooking an undulated plateau colored with light green of the fields, deep green of the orange groves, silvery green of the olive trees, dark green of the spruces, and here and there bright spots of blooming almond and peach trees, shading from flesh to deep pink. Amidst this glory of lights combined with the dark blue emerald and azure skies, the golden rays of the sun play hide and seek, and there arises a sensation while gazing upon the superb vision of the temple and its rims that a disappeared civilization once trod those sacred grounds.

WHEN Miss Virginia Dare Carter becomes Mrs. Russell Seamon Reynolds at the fashionable hour of 4 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, May 28, she will plight her troth on the birthday of her sainted mother, the late Mrs. George Franklin Carter, and the ceremony will be performed by Rev. Richard Orme Flynn, pastor of North Avenue Presbyterian church, the edifice in which her parents, the late Mr. and Mrs. Carter worshipped during their 20-year residence in Atlanta. Miss Carter and her brother, Franklin Chase Carter, went to New York two years ago to reside after their parents' death, returning to Atlanta only last week to visit Dr. and Mrs. W. W. Blackman on West Andrews drive, in whose home the wedding will be solemnized.

Sentiment plays an important part in the bride-elect's coming to Georgia to be married and the selection of her bridesmaids, for one of them, Miss Helen Cody, was her best friend at Tenth Street school; another, Miss Virginia Smith, was graduated with her in the class of 1925 at North Avenue Presbyterian school, while still another, Miss Elizabeth Smith, of Dalton, was her classmate at Queen's college, in Charlotte, N. C., and a sister member of the Sigma Delta sorority. Miss Carter counts among her aristocratic maternal ancestors Samual Chase, Maryland's signer of the Declaration of Independence, and she will carry the same filmy handkerchief edged with real lace that her mother, as Miss Edith Allen Chase, of Baltimore, Md., carried when she became the bride of George Franklin Carter, of Lumberton, N. C. The fair Miss Carter met her fiance, Mr. Reynolds at the home of Miss Margaret Horton in Greenwich, Conn., and it was love at first sight, the engagement being made known to 30 friends at a dinner given by Frank A. Vanderlip last February at his home on upper Fifth avenue in New York city. The aforementioned host and the bride-elect's brother, Franklin Chase Carter were intimate friends at Philips Exeter academy, in Exeter, N. H., and so when the lovely Miss Carter and Mr. Reynolds' engagement was announced, Mr. Vanderlip played host at the dinner party given in their honor.

Although but 20 summers have passed over the head of Miss Carter she has been engaged in electrical engineering, holding her own with six men in the department of development and research in the American Tel and Tel Company's office in the metropolis. Young, slender, extremely chic and divinely fair, this charming southerner studied higher mathematics at Columbia university to qualify for the responsible work she chose to follow and in which she made an enviable record.

Mr. Reynolds, who served as ensign in the navy during the World War, has a home in readiness for his bride in Greenwich, Conn., where he is prominent in the mercantile business and where his mother, Mrs. M. A. Reynolds, is a leader in social life.

A SIMPLE ANNOUNCEMENT in a church bulletin—and thereby hangs a tale! At least one of Atlanta's most popular bachelors is suspected of being the center of an intriguing story one phase of which finds its denouement in the statement, recently published in the list of announcements from one of the city's first churches, saying in effect that Mr. ——— is welcomed among the new members, coming from another of the city's most prominent churches of the same denomination.

Not that the gentleman, who is a prime favorite in exclusive circles of young society, occupies the center of interest alone, for a very charming young widow, also one of society's most popular members, plays a prominent part in the story, which at this point takes on the rosy tints of romance. The feminine counterpart, whose family ranks among the first and foremost in social, financial and cultural circles of the south, has long been a member and taken an active interest in activities of the church whose bulletin published the announcement. She it was, perhaps, who acted as the lodestar which attracted the handsome bachelor. And perhaps the church will be the scene of a brilliant wedding at an early date.

PAINTINGS of Virginia men and women who played leading and romantic roles in the history of the Old Dominion, the works of celebrated artists were viewed by a trio of Atlantans, Mrs. Edgar Paullin, Mrs. Frank Fleming and Miss Nellie Hightower, when they spent several days in Richmond on a recent motor tour. The works of these artists were carried to Richmond from England and France, collected from museums, colleges, and private homes in the United States, and assembled in the famous old house which once was the Warwick Priory in England, and which eventually will become the home of the Virginia Historical society, under whose auspices the exhibition was held. Beginning with Sir Walter Raleigh and Pocahontas and going on down through the period of many colonial governors to the time of Washington and the Revolution, and still later to the early years of the nineteenth century when the fiery John Randolph, of Roanoke, was making himself heard from one end of the land to the other. Among the artists represented are Sir Joshua Reynolds, Thomas Sully, Lawrence Sully, Edward Savage, Sir Godfrey Kneller, St. Memin, Henry Inman, Sir Peter Lely, James Peale, Charles Wilson Peale and Gilbert Stuart.

INTERESTING sidelights on life in California were revealed to one of Four Women recently by Mrs. Margaret C. Hall, who has returned from a nine months' visit to California. Mrs. Hall is the guest of her nephew and niece, Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Hall, at their home on Clifton road in Druid Hills. She was the guest of Mrs. Ruth Hatton at her home at Coronado Beach, Cal., and will remain in Atlanta until the first week in June, returning to her home at Daytona Beach, Fla. Mrs. Hall is a former resident of Atlanta, having made her home here for thirty years, during the lifetime of her husband, the late John T. Hall.

Glimpses of Mr. Hoover were among the interesting points of the trip.

"I went out in time to hear Mr. Hoover's acceptance speech in the great stadium at Stanford university," said Mrs. Hall in speaking of the trip. "Judge ——— and I were the only representatives from Florida; there were 75,000 seated, five bands in the grounds, airplanes overhead acting as a police force. When Mr. Hoover finished his speech I knew he was to be our next president. I went to Santa Barbara for a week to rest, attended the banquet given him, and on the day of the election worked at one of the precincts, heard and saw him inaugurated at Loew's theater in Los Angeles. Radios were placed in every school and park in Los Angeles. The one thing I enjoyed most was the Easter service at the Hollywood bowl. My niece, Emily Carlton, and I went at 4 o'clock. She was an usher; 30,000 people were seated and before sunrise several thousand more were standing on the hillsides in every direction. Hundreds of school girls were seated on a cross built on a hillside quite a distance away. It looked like a flower garden until they rose to sing the chorus, then their wraps dropped off and it was a living white cross. I never saw a more spiritual service, and every one felt it a beautiful custom. It is held in many places in California. Mrs. Carter was the first organist. I wish Georgia would begin these beautiful services. We do in Daytona on the beach for miles, but cannot have the electric cross, the hills and coloring."

SNAPSHOTS of Atlantans collected at random: Mrs. Bun Wylie visiting old St. John church at Broad and 29th streets in Richmond, Va., which is located on the site of an old Indian settlement, the original structure, completed in 1741, since rebuilt and enlarged, still remains, forming the east and west transepts of the present building. Here was held the Virginia convention in 1775, where Patrick Henry delivered his famous speech "Give me liberty or give me death." The surrounding burial ground contains many curious tombs and unique epitaphs. Mrs. Joseph Haverty and baby daughter, May Haverty, of Birmingham, Ala., receiving a cordial welcome upon their first visit to Atlanta since the little six-weeks-old Miss Haverty first opened her eyes upon this mundane sphere. Misses Elizabeth Dodd and Angel Allen fitting smart sports costumes to be donned at Tate Springs the forthcoming week, following their graduation from Oglethorpe university. Mrs. Eugene Harrington planting the colorful garden surrounding the first love nest of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Boston out on Collier road, where they will reside upon returning from their seashore home at St. Simons. That's all today. More next Sunday.

Farewell Parties and Polo Game Interest Military Society at Fort McPherson

Fort McPherson, May 18.—The military contingent had points of interest Friday in the hop at the Officers' Club in honor of the popular members of the post personnel leaving for change of station and in the polo game played at Fort Benning between the infantry team and the Fort McPherson squad. A number of the army set motored to Benning to see the game. Captain and Mrs. Thomas H. Ramsey, accompanied by their two small daughters, Harriet and Barbara Ann, left the garrison Friday morning to be the week-end guests of Lieutenant and Mrs. M. Monroe at the infantry school. Captain and Mrs. John R. Dinsmore and Mary Dinsmore are also numbered among the absentees for the week-end, for they are the guests of Captain and Mrs. Stanley Blanton at their home in Columbus. Captain Robert Joerg, Jr., motored with his brother, Frank Joerg, Thursday to Columbus for a brief visit with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Joerg. Captain Joerg will return to the post Sunday.

The hop at the Officers' Club Friday evening was a brilliant affair attended by 200 members of garrison and civilian social circles. The guests were received by Lieutenant Edward H. McDaniel, who presented them to General Abraham G. Lott and Mrs. Lott and the honor guests, Captain and Mrs. Robert Joerg, Jr., Captain and Mrs. Rufus A. Parsons, Miss Florence Blanchfield and Miss Anna Claypoole. The members of the fair contingent who are leaving for change of station were presented with shoulder bouquets of sweetheart rosebuds, lavender sweet peas and valley lilies by the officers and ladies of the 22d infantry. Dancing was enjoyed until midnight, when a buffet supper was served.

Prior to the hop there were a number of informal supper parties given by members of the garrison personnel. Of especial interest was the dinner party at which Captain and Mrs. Richard T. Edwards were hosts at their quarters. In the living room, where the guests were seated at small tables, yellow daisies and blue larkspur were effectively arranged in low bowls, while tall yellow candles were placed at intervals. The dining room had for its color motif pink, yellow and blue, which was carried out in the dainty pink rosebuds, yellow daisies and tall blue candles arranged on the long table, which was covered with an exquisite cloth of filet lace. Covers were placed for 20 members of the military set.

A recent addition to garrison circles is Lieutenant Arvel J. Monger, who has been assigned to Company G of the 22d infantry. Mrs. Monger and their winsome small daughter, Dine, are visiting relatives in San Antonio, Texas, and will join Lieutenant Monger at the post early in June, when they will occupy quarters in Building No. 27.

Lieutenant and Mrs. W. A. Minnis, of Jacksonville, Fla., are also attractive additions to the post life as well as to Atlanta social circles, for they are dividing their time for a brief two weeks between the post, where Lieutenant Minnis is on duty with the quartermaster corps, and Atlanta, where Mrs. Minnis, who was formerly Miss Velma Brock, has a host of friends.

Major and Mrs. Sereno Brett and their daughter, Betty Ann, arrived Saturday from Fort Benning, Ga., for the week-end at the garrison. They will return to Fort Benning Sunday evening.

Miss Mary Pepper entertained at her home on Spring street at a bridge tea yesterday afternoon, including in her guest list Misses Margaret Woodside, Mildred Bawsell, Edith Josey, Mar Ford Little, Georgia Pepper, Elizabeth Crankshaw, Mesdames Arthur S. Benton, A. A. McCurry, Harry Poole, D. Donald Keller, J. C. Crankshaw, Eugene C. Clarke, Jr., C. J. Jordan, Caleb Maddox, Britton Knox, Gail Shoup.

Mrs. Robert Griffith Turner and her charming small son, James Justice, left the Piedmont hospital Thursday afternoon and returned to their quarters in the post.

Atlanta Camp Fire Girls Sponsor Membership Drive and Activities

Camp Fire Girls of Atlanta are sponsoring a membership drive conducted for the purpose of acquainting all girls between the ages of 11 and 18 with the Camp Fire program and giving them the privileges of joining some group or organizing a new group. Co-operation on the part of the schools and churches has been given in this campaign and the Camp Fire program is heartily indorsed by our educators. Reid Hunter, superintendent in charge of Atlanta high schools, says: "For the past few years Camp Fire has been included as one of our extra curricular activities in the junior high schools of Atlanta. A regular classroom teacher usually serves as guardian. I feel that the Camp Fire program had filled a distinct need in our junior high schools in training for worthy home membership. Not only has the program helped our girls, but we feel that it has been of great value to our teachers. In many instances the Camp Fire program has enabled the teachers to find themselves. We unreservedly recommend Camp Fire for one of the extra curricular activities in a modern junior high school."

Girls registering with Camp Fire Girls will be eligible to attend the summer camp at Toccoa Falls, Ga., "where dreams come true," to be opened June 17. Mrs. Helen Bellman will be in charge of camp activities and Mrs. Laura Lombard the business manager. For the first time the Camp Fire Girls' program has been opened to business girls and a business group composed of young girls from Draugh's Business college, the Opportunity school and some of the department stores and offices has been organized and will have a weekly meeting. A summer camp, especially for the business group, will be held at Toccoa Falls at the end of the summer and the girls will enjoy the same tuition as the other groups.

Doughnut Sale.

The Stone Baking Company will sponsor the drive and a percentage of all doughnuts sold in the territory in Georgia covered by salesmen of Stone's Baking Company for the week of May 25 to June 1 will be given to Camp Fire Girls. The proceeds of this drive will be used to purchase camp equipment. There will be no house-to-house canvassing but Camp Fire Girls will have booths in the stores in sections of the city and parents and friends of the Camp Fire Girls are urged to buy doughnuts during the week of May 25 to June 1. The group selling the most doughnuts during the week will have the privilege of placing the name and symbols of their group upon a canoe for the lake. A second and third prize will be given the groups making the second and third highest sales. The second prize will be a paddle for the canoe and the symbol of the winning group will be painted on the handle. The third prize will be a large leather skin, which will be decorated by the winners with their group symbol and individual symbols of the group members.

Hike and Whoopee.

A citywide hike and camp whoopee will be celebrated Friday afternoon, May 24, at Silver lake. Mrs. Tom Brooke, president of Camp Fire Girls, will have charge of the program and the executive board and parents and publicity staff are the invited guests of honor. Camp Fire groups and their guardians are asked to assemble on the shore of the lake not later than 3:30 o'clock Friday afternoon and are requested to provide a box lunch. Mrs. Helen Bellman, camp director, will lead the Camp Fire Girls songs and tell about the summer camp at Toccoa Falls, which opens June 17. The I-haha group will give a poncho-rolling demonstration. Girls from O-Wakica camp will prepare some palatable dishes, demonstrating outdoor cooking, the Winnona group will illustrate difficult feats of campcraft, fire-building, signaling and knot-tying. Silver lake can be reached by taking the Oglethorpe car to Oglethorpe university and taking a short hike to the lake, or a good automobile road runs to the lake from the university.

Blackwell, gave a piano selection and a reading.

Vidalia Chapter.

Mrs. Ober D. Warthen was re-elected regent of the Vidalia Chapter, D. A. R., which met May 1 with Mrs. G. F. Granade and Mrs. John T. Ragan. Mr. Hugh Peterson, of Ailey, state representatives from Montgomery county, gave an address on the "Beginning and Crucial Points of the Civil War." Little Miss Jane Suddeth, of Lyons, who was a state contestant in voice from the grammar schools, sang two songs. After her songs Mrs. Warthen, at the request of Mrs. Ethel B. Giles, state counselor of Junior Music Clubs, presented Miss Suddeth with a prize.

Thomasville Chapter.

Mrs. J. B. Lockhart was named regent of the Thomasville chapter which met at 4 o'clock Wednesday afternoon at the home of Miss Nell Pringle, Mrs. Julia Stark Whitney being joint hostess with Miss Pringle and this being the last meeting before adjourning for the summer months.

Mrs. Harvey Trice delighted the chapter with two vocal selections, "Howdy Do, Mr. Springtime" and "Sylvia." Mrs. Estelle Pye, who also represented the chapter in Washington, was unavoidably absent from the May meeting, but will give a report on business sessions of the congress later.

Albany Chapter.

"Forestry" was the subject of the program at the meeting of Thronteeska chapter, D. A. R., held at the clubhouse Thursday afternoon, May 2. During the business meeting two members were elected and two names were presented for membership. Mrs. J. W. Gilespie, regent, read a letter from Professor R. E. Brooks, inviting the D. A. R. to the conference of visual education, in the Albany High school, for the consideration and discussion of the value of films and other visual aids in history teaching. The discussion was led by Dr. William H. Dudley, chief of the bureau of visual instruction at the University of Wisconsin, now at Yale on leave of absence.

The regent called attention to a copy of the D. A. R. magazine, which is placed upon the reading table at the Carnegie library by the chapter, back numbers being kept on file in the D. A. R. cabinet in the library. Miss Willie Walters gave an interesting sketch of the national convention, gleaned from the Washington papers. "Trees," by Joyce Kilmer, one of the greatest of poetic gems, was read by Mrs. F. B. Taylor.

The regent called attention to the slogan of the Georgia forest service, "Protection, Conservation, Perpetuation."

A. S. Perry, the speaker for the afternoon, gave a splendid address on "Trees," citing many notable trees in and near Albany, Brunswick, and other sections of Georgia. He urged the protection of the forests from the frightful damage from careless fires. He spoke of the value of replanting denuded hillsides, preventing erosion of valuable soils. Miss Emily Dozier, the Albany High school representative at the recent district meet, gave a piano solo, Chopin's "Third Ballade," her selection played at the contest.

"Golden Isles" of the Spanish Main

GLORIOUS sunshine, tempered by a breeze fresh from the Atlantic ocean—fairways shaded by ancient oaks in grey-bearded dignity—velvety smooth putting greens—the smartest society of the South—all these in a setting as old as history.

If golf should pall, you've a choice of a score of diversions—surf bathing or fresh water swimming—horseback riding over miles of shaded woodland bridle paths or on the hard-packed white sand of the beach—angling for fresh water or deep sea fish at Sea Island is famous wherever sportsmen gather—or there is archery, trapshooting, tennis, boating by sail or by motor—or there are long, carefree days of restful loafing. For the socially minded there is the continual round of concerts, bridge, dancing, teas.

Mothers will thrill over the special care and thought given the safety and amusement of children at Sea Island Beach. There's a special pavilion for their own use—a section of the beach reserved for them where automobiles and horses are prohibited. Here they can play all day in the health-giving sea air and sunshine without Mother giving a thought to their safety or welfare.

Sea Island Beach is intended primarily for Georgians. It is our ambition that the leaders of Georgia's social and industrial life shall comprise the nucleus around which the club and social activities revolve. Georgians here can be hosts to the visiting multitudes from other parts of the country.

Never has there been offered to Georgians of discernment and discrimination a seashore home with all modern luxuries, conveniences and improvements such as are available at Sea Island Beach this summer—and within one night by Pullman or a pleasant day by motor.

In order that your vacation may be most economical, special summer rates are now in effect at the Cloister. The historical essay contest closing in a blaze of glory, the names of the successful contestants are published today and these lucky ones, Daniel Cheek, of Lavonia; Marjorie Parrish, of Quitman; Byron King, of Fort Gaines, and Mary Sue Brown, of Cordele, will be for the next few weeks busily engaged in preparing for the trip to the Dixie Camp, the generous prize awarded to the Georgia division by A. A. Jamerson. While we wish that every child who expended effort in the endeavor could have received prizes, we feel sure that the benefit derived from the study of the life of Benjamin Harvey Hill and the efforts inspired by the contest will be of great benefit to every contestant. Our state will as usual make a brilliant historical record at the general convention at Biloxi. Much credit is due to our state historian, Mrs. Kirby Smith Anderson, of Madison, and our chairman of historical essay contest, Mrs. J. L. Beasen, of Milledgeville, and the very able committees who assisted them.

Mrs. W. Trox Bankston, division president, was honor guest of the Longstreet Chapter, U. D. C., at the recent biennal council of the Women's Federation of Clubs at Gainesville. Habersham Chapter.

Clarkesville and Habersham county have been traditionally patriotic from Revolutionary days to the present time, for in every conflict which the nation has engaged, brave men of our county were among the first to offer their services in defense of their homes and of noble principles of right and justice. It was for the purpose of celebrating this memorable occasion that the Habersham chapter, U. D. C., arranged appropriate exercises, which were carried out last Friday, a patriotic program being given at the school building in the presence of the entire school, the faculty and a number of visitors. The devotional was conducted by Rev. J. R. McAlpine, after which "The Soldiers' Chorus" from "Faust" was sung by a chorus of high school girls. Three readings, "The Flags," by Dorothy Graves; "Child of the Chattahoochee," by Rebekah Stewart, and "Our Offering," by Dolly Asbury, were well rendered and especially appropriate to the occasion. A feature of the program was the address by Rev. J. McDowell Richards, pastor of the Clarkesville Presbyterian church, in which he forcefully set forth the true significance of Memorial Day, and the principles for which the brave heroes of the 60s fought and died. The school sang "The Bonnie Blue Flag," and the audience was dismissed with prayer by Rev. T. C. Burrell, pastor of the Clarkesville Baptist church. The members of the local U. D. C. chapters were hostesses to their husbands, friends and the few remaining Confederate veterans at a sumptuous dinner which was served in the grand jury room of the courthouse. The "Lost Cause" was emphasized in the decorations of the flags and colors used around the room, and each U. D. C. member wore a tiny Confederate flag in honor of the day. In behalf of the veterans present T. J. Gastley expressed their appreciation for the compliment bestowed upon them by the chapter.

Peanuts decorating the cars in Confederate colors with the name of the chapter, Crawford W. Long, were displayed. The meetings of the chapter are held at the Henry Grady. It is an inspiration to the chapter to have as honorary president the daughter of Dr. Crawford W. Long, Mrs. A. O. Harper.

Twelve grades and three schools reported 100 per cent. The chapter voted to place the book, "Women of the South in War Times," in the high school library and the Carnegie library. The booklet, "Capitals of the South," will be placed in these libraries, too. Pictures of Robert E. Lee will be given by the chapter to the county schools at Acree and Walker Station and to the Mulberry Street school. Mrs. W. L. Davis and Miss Bessie Bruce Harris were appointed to contest for prizes in essays for the division and general organization. Mrs. I. C. Fields was asked to secure badges for the daughters to wear at the Memorial Day exercise. A nominating committee composed of Mrs. W. N. Ticknor, Mrs. W. L. Davis and Mrs. W. E. Charles T. Zachry.

Memorial Day exercises came as a climax to the work done by the Charles T. Zachry chapter, U. D. C., during the year 1928-29. Under the efficient leadership of the president, Mrs. Edward J. Reagan, the chapter has striven to reach the requirements necessary to be a standard organization. The program April 26 was interesting and inspiring. The school children and members of the Children of the Confederacy joined the parade of Confederate Veterans, Sons and Daughters of the Confederacy in decorating the graves of the Confederate dead. From the cemetery the march led to the First Presbyterian church, where the following program was given: Processional, "Star Spangled Banner;" "America;" invocation, Rev. R. P. Etheridge; "Carry Me Back to Ole Virginny," Miss Carrie B. Fouche and Miss Bess Fouche; "The Men Who Died," John Turner, Jr.; Medley of Southern Airs, men's quartet; presentation of medals to winners in essay contest; chorus, Children of Confederacy; presentation of crosses of honor; introduction of Honorable John M. Slaton, Colonel T. J. Brown; address, Honorable John M. Slaton; benediction, Rev. Guy Atkinson. The winners in the essay contest were Miss Elizabeth Russell, of the McDonough High school; Miss Ethel Sue McDonald, of the McDonough Junior High; second place, Miss Alma Medlock, of Hampton Junior High. The contest was open to junior high students this year for the first time.

Essay Contest Winners.

Louise Williams, at the high school, and Martha Cheney, of Broad Street seventh grade, won first places in the United Daughters of the Confederacy essay contest conducted here by the Dougherty county chapter in the high school and in the grammar schools. Second place in the high school went to Taymond Guilford and in the grammar school to Merriwether Furlow, of the McIntosh sixth grade. The winners of first place were given $5 in gold and those winning second place $2.50 in gold. To increase the interest in the contest the U. D. C. offered a framed picture of General Lee to the schools having every eligible child in the contest. Those winning pictures were Monroe, Flint and McIntosh. Georgia flags were given by the chapter to the grades having every child entring the contest. There were 427 essays entered in the local contest. They were written on the life of Benjamin Harvey Hill. Mrs. W. E. Rowsey and Mrs. P. J. Nix were co-chairmen of the essay contest and they were greatly assisted by Miss Sallie Billingslea, president of the U. D. C. The winning essays go from Albany to the district contest. The winners in the district contest are entered in the state contest.

Memorial Services.

Memorial Day exercises were held in the auditorium of the First Baptist church of Pelham by the Pelham U. D. C. chapter. The roll call was made by Mr. McCollum, of Baconton. Miss Sallie Billingslea, president of the Dougherty County Chapter U. D. C., says: "Mr. Miller is well qualified to be in charge of replacing the statue which was demolished last December. He is very capable, and we are pleased to announce that he will have charge of re-erecting the monument." A committee composed of Mrs. W. L. Davis, Mrs. W. N. Ticknor, Miss Edwina Davis, Mrs. Byrd Odum, Mrs. W. E. Rowsey, Mrs. W. W. Pace, Mrs. H. J. Von Welled and Miss Billingslea selected a site on the auditorium lawn for the monument and supervised the placing of the base and pedestal.

V.'s from United States base hospital No. 48, and a large delegation from the Old Ladies' Home and Home of Confederate Widows. The exercises were held in the pavillion, with the president, Mrs. L. D. The numbers were devoted to mothers and especially to the mothers of the Confederacy, because of the approaching Mother's Day. Mrs. H. G. Williams gave a poem entitled "Mother," which was followed by a reading by Mrs. C. Farmer Hendry on "The Queen of the Confederacy." Miss Frances Mallard, who was unable to be present, was to have given the life of James Ryder Randall, who attributed his inspiration for writing his verses to good women, and especially his mother. Liberty County Chapter, U. D. C.

Liberty County Chapter, U. D. C., held the memorial exercises at the historic cemetery at old Midway church, in Liberty county, on April 26, with men and women present from this and other states. The program began with the march of the Daughters of the Confederacy from the church into the center of the cemetery, where the exercises were held at the foot of the immense marble shaft erected by the federal government in memory of the revolutionary generals, James Screven and Daniel Stewart. The procession was headed by two Confederate veterans, Harrison Clifton, of Lyons, and John Stripling, of Reidsville, both of whom carried the Stars and Bars. The hymn, "Faith of Our Fathers," resounded throughout the ancient cemetery as the opening number on the program, after which the assemblage was led in prayer by the Rev. J. F. Merrin, of Flemington, pastor of the Liberty county Presbyterian churches. Miss Laura M. Fraser, of Flemington, president of the Liberty county chapter U. D. C. made an eloquent patriotic address before she introduced the Confederate veterans present for the exercises. Miss Fraser then introduced the speaker, the Rev. Arthur Morrison Martin, assistant pastor of Independent Presbyterian church, Savannah. Mr. Martin is a descendant of the early Midway colonists and it was especially fitting that he should deliver the annual memorial address. After singing "Sweet Bye and Bye," the benediction was spoken by the Rev. E. M. Elder, pastor of the Methodist church of Hinesville, then a squad from the Liberty Independent troop, under the command of Captain C. J. Martin, of Flemington, fired a salute, followed by the soft notes of taps.

Mrs. Hardman Commends Health Work Sponsored by 5th District

Mrs. L. G. Hardman, wife of Georgia's governor, voices her appreciation of the splendid health work accomplished throughout the fifth district by the Parent-Teacher organizations in the following article:

"The first Sunday in May brought me a keen pleasure. Scores of children gathered about the mansion entrance to bid me happiness as their patroness of health. They brought with them, along with their bright faces and baskets heaped with flowers from their own gardens, reports of the splendid work being done through the efforts of the Parent-Teacher Associations which they represented throughout the fifth district of our state. I was particularly interested in the summer follow-up work, because it seems an advance, but I wish that I might tell to the people throughout the state the minute details of the work of each group, from the arrangement of a regular period of rest and play for the child in the long, hot summer months, to the attention given to the proper lunch in the schoolroom that is far removed from the home; 10,824 children have been examined for physical defects in the fifth district. So far, of those examined only 2,608 proved normal children, needing no medical attention—this after the third year of endeavor on the part of the P.-T. A. and after many years of endeavor on the part of other health agencies. How important it is that our children should be examined each year for physical defects, and those defects noted, be corrected. Toxin-anti-toxin was given 1,923 of the children examined and 435 of those examined had their eyes treated or glasses provided where they were needed; 85 of those examined had their tonsils removed, and 265 were treated for gland troubles. The children enrolled in 55 white schools and those enrolled in one colored school have dental certificates for perfect teeth, and two Atlanta schools showed an enrollment of 100 per cent health certificates as well as dental certificates. One Fulton county school saw that all defective children enrolled were carried to the health clinic. One DeKalb county school attributed the highest percentage in attendance in the county to the close co-operation of the school P.-T. A. with the health officer and the county physician. One Douglas county P.-T. A. saw that more than 450 children over the county were given toxin-anti-toxin.

"I should like to greet each little girl who represented the interest of the organization she brought me greetings from, as a factor in the life of her community, each little boy, as a captain in the noblest work in the world! A child's attitude through life is largely dependant upon its physical condition. A perfect flower must have proper nourishment and sunshine and air. I wish that each district in Georgia might have its May Day, exphasizing the importance of these things. I wish that all the children might gather at the mansion, for it is the fondest wish of your governor and of his lady that the citizens of Georgia may be blessed with good health. And in my mind's eye I see all the little children asking us to help them to achieve the ideal of a perfect physical body, the passport to all true happiness, and May Day will always bring my eager interest in all that pertains to child health in Georgia, and not May Day only, but every day."

Lee Street Meet Featured By Election

The Lee Street P.-T. A. met Tuesday afternoon. The following new officers were elected: Mrs. H. J. Simpson, president; Mrs. G. C. Barron, vice president; Mrs. A. P. Stewart, secretary; Mrs. J. R. Johnson, treasurer; Mrs. R. C. Marks, chairman of ways and means. Miss Archer and Mrs. H. F. Simpson recently returned from the state P.-T. A. convention at Savannah, gave interesting reports of the convention.

Miss Wesley, principal, urged that all children take a part in the summer reading club under the direction of the Carnegie library. She gave a splendid report of what has been accomplished by the Lee Street school during the past year. One of the most interesting was the discovery of an inexpensive way to color moving picture slides that has been taken up by the Keystone Film company.

A poem, "The Mother," was read by Miriam Morgan. The novelty feature was "The Cafeteria Orchestra," composed of the officers of the cafeteria department. They wore colored smocks, paper sack caps and very ably rendered "Let Me Call You Sweetheart" and "Dixie." Their instruments were a choice collection of kitchen utensils.

The guest prizes were won by Mrs. Bernard Cohen and Miss Beville. In the count of mothers the prize went to Miss Garner, low six, for the upper grades, and to Miss Heinz, high kindergarten, for the low grades.

Spiritual Growth.

If you would make real progress in spiritual growth, you must have a love for Christian truth, a fixed habit of Bible reading and a genuine desire to understand its teachings.

Peter gave the following good advice to the Christians to whom he wrote: "Putting away, therefore, all wickedness and all guile, and hypocrisies and envies, and all evil speaking, as newborn babes, long for the spiritual milk which is without guile, that ye may grow thereby unto salvation; if ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious."

Forbes, after a visit to Liberia, "a young man wearing clothes or speaking English, I usually found a former student of the Muhlenberg mission.

Mrs. Ben Thompson Takes Part In Memphis Missionary Pageant

Mrs. Ben S. Thompson, of Madison, chairman for Georgia of the Ruby anniversary year of Woman's Missionary Union of the Southern Baptist convention, who reported for Georgia at the recent meeting of that body in Memphis, Tenn.

BY MRS. J. H. ZACHRY.

Mrs. Ben S. Thompson, Georgia's Ruby anniversary chairman, led Georgia's victorious leaders in the missionary pageant which featured the W. M. U. convention held in Memphis, Tenn., May 6 and 7.

The leaders were Mesdames W. F. Neel, W. M. U. president; A. F. McMahon, corresponding secretary; J. N. Stewart, Young People's leader.

The Georgia women swelled with pride as these four leaders were crowned—for Georgia was one of the five victorious states. But we bowed with them in love and humility, when later they laid these trophies at the feet of the King o Kings as the vast audience sang "Jesus Shall Reign."

The fellowship dinner Tuesday, evening, May 7, attended by about 35 missionaries and more than 1,200 delegates and W. M. U. women was a wonderful inspiration. Testifying to the "Keeping Power of God" these messengers from Argentine, Brazil, Africa, Chile, China and Palestine, as well as our own America, said "You can travel faster on your knees than any other way."

One of the high points of the convention was the address of Mrs. Carter Wright, general chairman of the Ruby anniversary, who spoke on "Things That Abide." She said, "We have not been working for goals, but for the glory of God. Now prove it. The task is not fin hed. Be watchful and strengthen the things that remain." At the close of her address Mrs. Wright was presented with a W. M. U. ring, the torch of which held a glowing ruby. Mrs. W. J. Neel, Georgia's president, presenting it in behalf of the convention, very beautifully expressed the appreciation and love which this emblem represented.

Mrs. Cox, south-wide W. M. U. president, marked a new epoch in W. M. U. history, being the first woman ever invited to speak at a Southern Baptist convention. Dr. Louie Newton said her address was the high light of the convention. In her message to the W. M. U. Mrs. Cox said:

"Which way in 1929?

"The journey to the edge of the horizon begins with a single step. The first step before us is conservation and continued expansion. Conservation of the individual won, the organizations formed during the Ruby anniversary period. Continued expansion in spiritual development of both individual and organization. Constant expansion in new organizations."

Baptist W. M. U.

Mrs. L. O. Freeman, superintendent of publicity of Georgia Baptist W. M. U., presents the following report:

Tuesday's meeting of the executive board of the Baptist Woman's Missionary Union of Georgia was featured by reports of outstanding events of the Southern Baptist convention, held recently at Memph .

Working plans of the union for the next convention year, in their relationship to the activities of the Georgia union, were discussed by members of the board who were in attendance upon the convention. These representatives were Mesdames W. J. Neel, A. F. McMahon, Julia V. Stewart, J. H. Zachry, Paul Etheridge and Ben Thompson.

Baptist women all over the state will rejoice to know that Georgia met all goals set for the ruby anniversary year, and took her place among the five victorious states of the southern union. Other states reaching all goals were Alabama, Illinois, Oklahoma and New Mexico. The crowning ceremony in celebration of this achievement was an impressive feature of the convention. Presidents and secretaries of these victory states, robed in white, marched in processional before the throne chair, where each in turn received the laurel crown of the victor from the hands of Mrs. W. J. Cox, president of the entire southern union. Then, as the triumphant strains of "Crown Him Lord of All" burst forth, these crowns were removed from the heads of the wearers and placed, symbolically, at the feet of the Master.

Comparative statistics show Georgia well in the lead among the 18 states comprising the southern union. In number of new organizations for the year Georgia holds first place, and in total number of organizations, third place. The banner offered each year to the state organizing the greatest number of Royal Ambassador conclaves was, for the first time, won by Georgia. The banner for the largest number of new Y. W. A's was again awarded this state. These trophies were exhibited at Tuesday's meeting by Mrs. Julia V. Stewart, young people's secretary.

Hospital Supplies.

In important item of the board's recent session was the urgent request of Mrs. I. B. Smith, White Cross chairman, for supplies for the Baptist hospital at Hwangshien, China. This request is in response to the distress call of Miss Lucy Wright, superintendent of nurses at this hospital. Miss Wright states that due to revolutionary wars now raging in China, wounded soldiers are being brought to the hospital by scores. The wards are all full and cots are being placed in every available spot. Supplies for which the hospital is in urgent need are army blankets, sheets, spreads, towels, soap, gauze, medicated cotton, bandages and hot water bottles. This is an "SOS" call, and societies are earnestly asked to send these articles direct to the Warren Memorial hospital, Hwangshien, China, or send cash money to Mrs. I. B. Smith, Palmer building, Atlanta, and she will make the necessary purchases.

Other officers and departmental superintendents reporting were Mrs. Paul Etheridge, vice president, north central division; Mrs. Ben Thompson, vice president of the east central division; Mrs. J. C. Lanier, training school trustee; Mrs. W. W. Stark, stewardship chairman; Mrs. L. O. Freeman, chairman of publicity.

Plans are being formulated for the state Woman's Missionary Union convention, which will meet at Bessie Tift college, Fortsyth, June 11-13. In as far as possible, statistical reports are to be relegated to the background and emphasis placed upon inspirational addresses, pageants and other distinctive features.

Among the notable speakers for the occasion will be Mrs. Rosalee Mills Appleby, missionary to Brazil, whose recent address at Memphis was one of the highlights of the convention. Other speakers will be Mrs. W. J. Neel, state president; Mrs. Carter Wright, president of the Alabama union; Rev. J. M. Teresi, Vienna, and Rev. Louie D. Newton, Atlanta. The co-operative program will be discussed by Dr. Walter P. Binns. Home missions will be represented by Rev. J. F. Plainsfield, Italian pastor, Tampa. Foreign missions will be represented by Miss Doris Knight, China; Mrs. Scott Patterson, Africa; Rev. E. E. Steele, China, and others.

JASPER BAPTIST W. M. U.

Miss Ruth Jinks, field worker of the north central division of the B. W. M. U. of Georgia, and Mrs. E. M. Bailey, Acworth, mission study chairman of the division, have recently visited Tate Baptist church and conducted a mission study institute. Miss Jinks taught the textbook "The How and Why of W. M. U. Methods," and Mrs. Bailey taught a book on "Stewardship and Methods" for junior organizations. Representatives from Talking Rock, Jasper and Tate were in attendance.

Capitol Avenue W. M. S.

Mrs. E. H. Gibson, secretary of the fourth district of the B. W. M. U., of Atlanta association, reports a visit to Capitol Avenue W. M. S., Monday afternoon, May 13, when a large crowd of interested women were present to hear Mrs. W. H. Major, president of the society, give an account of her visit to Memphis, Tenn., where she attended the annual meeting of the W. M. U. of the Southern Baptist convention. Capitol Avenue W. M. S. is one of the leading societies, not only of the fourth district, but also of the entire city.

Gordon Street Church.

Through Mrs. F. B. Baldwin, mission study chairman of W. M. S. of Gordon Street Baptist church, arrangements were made to hold a mission study class on Tuesday, May 14, at the church. The class was well attended and included Mrs. Carl Haynes, president; Mrs. F. B. Baldwin, Mrs. E. G. Gibson, secretary of the fourth district of B. W. M. U.; Mrs. W. H. Faust, wife of the pastor; Mrs. Spencer King and Miss Elizabeth King, wife and daughter of Rev. Spencer King and other leaders of the society. "The Heart of Home Missions," led by Mrs. Una Roberts Lawrence, was the textbook studied.

After luncheon, served by Mesdames H. J. Pierson, W. H. Doyle and Otis Oglesby, the chapter on mountain people and the schools fostered by the home board was discussed. Miss Elizabeth King, who has recently returned from a session's work in one of the home board mountain schools, known as Armo, gave an illuminating talk on mountain people, whom she characterized as among the noblest and most lovable she had ever known. This Armo school, where Miss King is teaching, is situated on the border line between Arkansas and Missouri, and she stated she slept in Arkansas and had her meals in Missouri.

Decatur School.

The adult department of Decatur First Baptist Bible school enjoyed an evening of good fellowship Friday, May 10, with a banquet at the church, with 150 persons attending.

Mr. Grady Wilson, chairman of the church social committee for 1929, made a most admirable master of ceremonies. Music was furnished by Miss Martha Overton at the piano, Walton Bobo, violin, and James Davis, xylophone. Sam Fromshon gave a humorous reading, "The Irishman's Dream," with an encore, "Happy Married Life," which were greatly enjoyed. Miss Evelyn Bentley from West End and Master J. C. Smith from East Atlanta gave several pleasing selections on Hawaiian guitars.

Speeches were made by Miss Essie Hughes, Flint Singletary, E. J. Baird, W. H. McWhorter, Mrs. Grady Wilson, Mrs. Bill Davis, Dr. J. A. Combs and Walter Estes for the various classes of the department, introducing new members and visitors. The beloved pastor and his son, Rev. A. J. Moncrief, Jr., were in Memphis, attending the Southern Baptist convention. A message, expressing regret in his absence and the church's best wishes for his continued happiness and success among us, was wired him.

Decatur First Baptist.

At 6:30 o'clock Wednesday, May 22, supper will be served for the monthly Y. W. A. program meeting, Miss Mary Nolan in charge of the program. The Bible school departments and organized classes meet Wednesday, May 22, at 7 o'clock.

T. E. L. Class.

An attractive program was rendered in the T. E. L. Class of the Druid Hills Baptist church Sunday, May 12. "Open the Gates of the Temple" and "The Old Road" were sung by Duncan McKinley; "The Shrine at Mother's Knee," was read by Mrs. Frank Rogers, Mrs. Morris Croft, accompanied by Mrs. R. M. Forester at the piano, sang "Mother, My Dear;" Mrs. M. K. Layton, the teacher of the class, paid tribute to the mothers of the past and present.

Friday afternoon, May 24, at 3 o'clock, the class meets with Mrs. Alex Reeves, 2107 East Lake road. Mrs. W. M. Perryman, vice president, will have charge of the program and Mrs. H. L. Bowden's group will serve refreshments.

Sunday, May 26, will be "Home Coming Day" in the class. An attendance of 300 is expected. The class is seeking to raise not less than $300 that day to take care of the many special offerings that are called for so frequently. This will enable them to concentrate their efforts more fully on "first things."

Of more than 1,600 present in the school last Sunday, 183 of this number were in the T. E. L. Class. Mrs. Alex Reeves, the president, states the class's goal for weekly attendance is 200.

Baptists Lose Beloved Member In Death of the Late Mrs. Key

BY MRS. J. W. WILLS.
State Editor of the Federated Church Page.

In the passing of Mrs. James L. Key, wife of former Mayor James L. Key, of Atlanta, on Tuesday, May 14, Georgia Baptists have lost one of their most loyal and untiring workers. As a member of the Ponce de Leon Avenue church and woman's society she was greatly beloved, but her Christian activities and sympathies extended far beyond her own local church and community. Mrs. Key was best known as president of the woman's auxiliary of the Georgia Baptist hospital, a position which she held for a number of years, having succeeded the late Mrs. Sam D. Jones, the founder of the auxiliary, with whom Mrs. Key served many years as secretary of the organization.

Mrs. Key's heart ever went out to the sick and unfortunate. It was due to her sympathetic service, which was extended to scores of women and children throughout the state, whom she placed at the Georgia Baptist hospital, that they received the most skillful medical and surgical aid, which restored them to their families in health and strength.

When the new main building of the Georgia Baptist hospital was completed the woman's auxiliary erected on the grounds, at the front of the building, a beautiful fountain in her honor, on which was engraved the name "Mrs. James L. Key," as a tribute of her unselfish devotion to this great institution. The memorial trees adorning the grounds, given in honor of some beloved friends of the hospital, originated in the heart of Mrs. Key, which was a characteristic thought of her loving appreciation of the service of others.

Brides-Elect, Bride and Army Debutante

Today's feature page presents two popular brides-elect, whose engagements are announced today, an attractive bride of May and a popular debutante of army circles. Upper left, Miss Martha Beall Ridley, whose engagement is announced by her parents, Judge and Mrs. James Beall Ridley, to David Wight Goodall Macintyre, of Charlotte, N. C., the marriage to be solemnized at an early date. Upper center, Miss Barbara King, daughter of General Campbell King and Mrs. King, the former being commander of Fort Benning, near Columbus, Ga. Miss King is the niece of Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell Campbell King, of this city, whom she plans to visit during the summer. This lovely belle of the army set was formally presented last January to southern society at the fashionable St. Cecelia ball in Charleston, S. C., having also made her debut in Washington, D. C. Upper right, Mrs. James C. Dunlap, who, before her marriage, which was solemnized Saturday, May 11, at the North Avenue Presbyterian church, was Miss Lucile Stone, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Stone. The lower photograph is a likeness of Miss Mary Pepper, whose engagement is announced today by her mother, Mrs. Mary Gentry Pepper, to Charles Weir Crankshaw, the marriage to be solemnized in June. Photograph of Miss Pepper by Bascom Biggers. Mrs. Dunlap's and Miss Ridley's photographs are the work of Rogers & Farmer. Photograph of Miss King was made by Bachrach.

Miss Hortense Adams and Mr. Boston Wed at Brilliant Home Ceremony

Exquisite beauty featured the marriage ceremony of Miss Hortense Horne Adams and Frank Mackey Boston, Jr., which was solemnized yesterday afternoon at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Albert S. Adams, on Sixteenth street, before a fashionable assemblage of Atlanta society with Rev. Father Cotter, of the Sacred Heart church, officiating. During the assembling of the guests an appropriate musical program was rendered by an orchestra under the direction of Enrico Leide. The bridal party descended the stairs to the first strains of the wedding march from "Lohengrin" and passed through an aisle formed by a number of the bride's friends, who held wide white satin ribbons, the group including Misses Angel Allen, Mary Moseley, Nell Clayton, Marion Hull Smith, Claire Hanner, Mary Harris, Billy Johnson and Mrs. Jack Parker. They wore attractive gowns in pastel shades, each wearing a picture hat of horsehair braid to match her costume and a shoulder bouquet of valley lilies.

Elaborate Decorations.

An altar was erected across the spacious sun parlor entrance before which the bridal party stood. The back of the sun porch was banked with palms, foliage plants and potted ferns. Floor vases of white Calla lilies, white snapdragons and white roses were arranged at artistic intervals amongst the green foliage. White satin covered the entire altar on which was placed a seven-branched cathedral candelabra holding white burning tapers. On either side of the altar were tall single cathedral tapers tied with clusters of Calla lilies. Gracing the front of the altar was a white satin prie-dieu outlined around the edge by valley lilies and white sweetpeas. The reception rooms of the home were attractively decorated with vases and baskets filled with spring flowers arranged artistically on the consoles, tables and bookcases. Garlands of smilax from which fell graceful showers of swainsona and white sweet peas adorned the doorways and windows. The wall brackets were trimmed with bouquets of Calla lilies and white snapdragons.

Miss Constance Adams, the bride's only sister, who acted as maid-of-honor, entered alone, wearing a beautiful gown of cream-colored chiffon featuring green and yellow figures. The hemline of the modish costume fell from a graceful short length in front to floor in the back. A cape effect was introduced on the bodice, the circular end of the cape falling below the waistline in the back. She wore a hat of natural horsehair braid trimmed around the crown with a band of orange blossoms. Her slippers were green satin matching the attractive green figures in her chiffon gown and she carried a sheath of yellow Calla lilies tied with green satin ribbon.

Beautiful Bride.

The beautiful young bride was accompanied to the altar by her brother, Albert S. Adams, by whom she was given in marriage. The youthful beauty of the bride was accentuated by her wedding gown of white satin, the bodice being veiled by a short jacket of rose point lace made with long lace sleeves. The lovely floral design of the lace was outlined with tiny crystals and seed pearls. A graceful train of the satin fell from the waistline, being a continuation of the skirt's irregular hemline. A billowy tulle veil was attached to a becoming lace cap confined to her head at the back by sprays of orange blossoms, the tulle extending to the end of her train. She wore white satin slippers trimmed with clusters of orange blossoms and carried a bouquet of white Calla lilies tied with white satin ribbon. The groom and his best man, William Armstrong, joined the bride and her brother at the altar.

Mrs. Adams, the bride's mother, entertained at a reception immediately after the marriage service. She wore a handsome gown of gray lace veiling

Miss Martha Ridley And D. A. Macintyre To Wed

Society's most cordial interest is enlisted in the announcement made today of the engagement of Miss Martha Beall Ridley, popular Atlanta belle, to David Wight Goodall Macintyre, of Charlotte, N. C. The announcement is made by Miss Ridley's parents, Judge and Mrs. James Beall Ridley, prominent members of Atlanta society. The bride-elect's mother, formerly Miss Clyde Edmundson, is the daughter of the late John D. Edmundson, of LaGrange, who before his death was a well-known civic leader, holding among other offices of trust, the mayoralty of the city for 14 consecutive years. Through her father Miss Ridley is connected with several of the oldets families in the south. Her great grandfather, Dr. Robert Archibald Thomas Ridley, was a native of North Carolina, graduating from the university at Chapel Hill in 1928. He moved to Georgia in 1837 and was eminently successful as a planter and famed for his skill in his profession. A member of the whig party he represented his county in the house of representatives and the senate. Miss Ridley is the granddaughter of the late Dr. Charles D. Ridley and Mrs. Ridley, who before her marriage was Miss Martha Heard Beall. She is the niece of Mrs. Charles J. Warner, of Rome; Mrs. Julia Ridley Willett, of Anniston, Ala.; Mrs. Hatton Lovejoy, of LaGrange, and Mrs. B. C. Swanson, Jr., of this city.

The elder daughter of her parents, the bride-elect was graduated from North Avenue Presbyterian school, where she was a member of the Pi Pi sorority of Washington seminary. Later she attended Lucy Cobb at Athens. She is the sister of Miss Anne Ridley and Charles Bromfield Ridley.

Mr. Macintyre was born in Glasgow, Scotland, and moved to Canada with his parents in his early boyhood. Later the family resided in Atlanta for several years and while here he attended Boys' High and the University of Alabama, where he was a member of the Kappa Alpha fraternity. He completed his textile work at New Bedford, Mass., and is now associated with the Du Pont Company of Wilmington, Del., at the branch office located in Charlotte, N. C. He has one brother, Bert Macintyre, and his parents are Mr. and Mrs. A. Ferguson Macintyre, of Anderson, S. C. His father, who is prominent in the textile world, is agent for the Appleton Manufacturing Company. His mother, of distinguished Scotch ancestry, was before her marriage Miss Elizabeth Wight, daughter of Dr. David Goodall Wight, who for many years has been pastor of a large Scotch Presbyterian church in Glasgow.

The wedding, an informal morning event, will occur at an early date. Bishop Warren A. Candler will officiate and the only attendants will be Miss Anne Ridley, maid of honor, and Bert Macintyre, best man. Little Eleanor Troutman, cousin of the bride-elect and winsome daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Troutman, will act as flower girl.

The ushers will be Dr. Robert G. Stephens, Judge Luther Z. Rosser, Charles Warner, of Rome; Reid Whitaker, Dr. R. B. Ridley and Gaines Edmundson, of LaGrange.

Miss Pepper and Charles Crankshaw To Be Married at June Ceremony

Announcement is made today by Mrs. Mary Gentry Pepper of the engagement of her daughter, Mary, to Charles Weir Crankshaw, the marriage to take place in June. Miss Pepper is the granddaughter of Mrs. William T. Gentry and the late William T. Gentry, of this city. The young bride-elect is the youngest of a trio of sisters who are well known in Atlanta, where their family has been identified with the cultural and economic development of the state for a long number of years. Although Miss Pepper has never made a formal bow to society she is a popular member of the younger set of the city and has had the educational advantages of schools in distant lands and travel in many climes. She is a niece of Mrs. Graham Phelan and Mrs. John J. Woodside, Jr., both being prominent Atlanta matrons; J. H. Gentry, of this city; Thomas R. Gentry, of Coral Gables, Fla., and Mrs. Milton Carlin, of Orlando, Florida.

Mr. Crankshaw is the son of Mrs. Joseph C. Crankshaw and the late Joseph Crankshaw and is a well-known young business man, having attended the Georgia School of Technology. He is a member of the S. P. M. and S. P. E. fraternities, and is head of the Emblem shop in the Metropolitan building. His mother was formerly Miss Ethel Holliday, and his maternal grandparents were the late Mr. and Mrs. George Holliday, while his paternal grandparents were the late Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton Crankshaw, a foursome of prominent pioneer citizens who were identified with the early history of Atlanta. Mrs. Margaret Crankshaw Thomas is a paternal aunt and Mrs. John T. Moody and George H. Holliday, are his maternal aunt and uncle. Miss Elizabeth Crankshaw and Joseph C. Crankshaw are his brother and sister, and Mr. Crankshaw is a namesake of his paternal uncle, the late Charles W. Crankshaw. In view of a recent bereavement in Mr. Crankshaw's family the wedding will be quietly solemnized.

A number of social functions are planned in honor of these popular members of the younger set to be given prior to the wedding. Sunday evening, Miss Pepper and Mr. Crankshaw will be honor guests at a buffet supper given by Miss Georgia Pepper at her home on Spring street.

Tuesday, May 21, Miss Pepper will be the central figure at a luncheon given by her aunt, Mrs. John Woodside, Jr., at her home on East Fifteenth street.

Tallulah Falls School Gives Party to State Clubwomen

Georgia Federation triumphant! No state body of women ever had probably such a spectacular celebration as when, on May 10th, the federated clubwomen of Georgia completed their 33rd annual meeting at Gainesville by driving 50 miles over a perfect road as the guests of their gracious Gainesville hosts to spend the day at their own mountain school and celebrate its 20th anniversary and how the federation did improve the opportunity to see and know the wonderful thing it had created. More than 200 women were present and among them were every officer of Georgia Federation excepting one and every district president except two. Many of these enthusiastic visitors were from the furthest southern counties of the state and as the school is in the extreme northeast of Georgia, it was evident that the federation deemed it a rare opportunity to inspect the plant, which was in full operation with every grade and every workshop in full service. Nature, too, decided to take a day off from hostilities and a marvelous spring sun poured down on the three levels of Cherokee mountain and glittered and danced over the masses of pink radiance roses and sheets of spiced pinks in every shade of rose which hung over the rock walls and poured out fragrance in welcome to the owners of the school.

Mrs. John K. Ottley, president of the board of trustees, Mrs. A. H. Brenner, president of Georgia Federation, and Mrs. Hiram T. Flannigan, acting president of the ninth district, were the formal reception committee, while Miss Anne C. Davis, principal of the school, Mrs. Z. I. Fitzpatrick, chairman of the day, and Mrs. H. M. Nicholes, luncheon chairman, with the assistance of the school faculty, were actively engaged in receiving and promoting the pleasure of the visitors everywhere. Mrs. A. D. McCurry, ninth district chairman of Tallulah, and local chairmen for the school from the ninth district also received.

School Bell Rings.

At 12 o'clock the great school bell sounded and the students all came into chapel where they sang for the guests, especially acquitting themselves with credit in "Georgia Land," and the school sang "Tallulah." Miss Davis then welcomed the federation and introduced her faculty. Mrs. Brenner responded in behalf of the federation and presented as a personal gift, a handsome flag of the state of Georgia. At this time, Mrs. Nicholes presented a new United States flag which was already flying bravely in the breeze and which was the gift of the Old Guards of Atlanta, through Mr. W. M. Camp, commander. Great appreciation was expressed for these two timely gifts which made May 10 flag day at Tallulah. Every officer of Georgia Federation and every district president was introduced and spoke words of affectionate interest to the children. They were followed by the presentation of each trustee and a few other specially honored guests, all of whom pledged heart and hand anew for work for the "Light in the Mountains."

A pleasurable feature was the presentation by Mrs. J. A. Horne, state chairman of juniors, of six junior contestants from various districts, each of whom spoke to the student body and declared that Tallulah school would always be their really, truly own. The federated women were greatly pleased to have presented at this time, one of their old students, Grace Taylor LaVerne, who, with three other sisters, had been brought up at the school and at 11 years of age, went to New York to be the loved and fostered child of Lucile LaVerne, that great outstanding exponent of the mountain woman of the Appalachians, on the stage through the part of Mrs. Cabell in Lula Vollmer's play, "Sun-Up." Grace, who is on a visit to the school, before leaving for Paris, on May 23, expressed her joy in being home again and her undying love for Tallulah Falls school. "She is the same old Grace," said one affectionate clubwoman, "even to the long blonde curls which nobody else in the world seems to possess today." Grace's older sister, Helen, is a graduate of Tallulah Falls school and of the normal course at Berea college, and has been for two years an instructor in crafts, at Tallulah. She goes this summer with another Tallulah student, for three months special work at Mrs. Shook's School of Weaving, in New York. Gertrude Taylor, the second sister graduated last year at Tallulah Falls school, and is completing her first college year at Demorest. She will probably teach next year and later continue her studies. Anne Taylor, the third sister, will be the valedictorian of the senior class at Tallulah Falls school this year, receiving her diploma at about the time when Grace and Miss LaVerne will be sailing for Paris. Federated clubwomen of Georgia may well take pride in this family record which can be duplicated in essentials in many other cases since the bringing up of family groups is the special interest of the heart of Georgia Federation.

Luncheon Served.

At the conclusion of chapel exercises, the whole group passed from the Isma Dooly auditorium to Lucy Lester Willet House, and were served a luncheon which satisfied every demand of appetites whetted by early rising, a fifty-mile drive and a climb over Cherokee mountain, and into eleven buildings. The students served promptly and the luncheon prepared by them was delicious and bountiful for which thanks are due to generous friends in Athens and Atlanta and even from Memphis, who supplied nearly every item for a meal which before the day was over served 440 people. Greatly honored at the luncheon were Mrs. Albert S. Hardy, president of the Gainesville Woman's Club, and a great group of distinguished men and women from Gainesville, who escorted the visitors to the school, and were especially honored at the luncheon. Truly a great occasion was this celebration of the twentieth anniversary of the federation's school and the completion of its Greater Tallulah program, by which the school in six years has been expanded from two units to eleven and fitly did this day end—one of the most beautiful and successful of Georgia Federation's annual conventions.

Mrs. Flannigan's Friends Pay Tribute To Her Good Work

Mrs. Hiram Flannigan, of Winder, who served as acting president for ninth district, G. F. W. C., before the biennial council held the first part of May in Gainesville, whose friends pay tribute to her splendid work during that period.

During the council meeting of the State Federation of Women's Clubs in Gainesville recently, there was one important occasion that was not on the general program. This was a call meeting of the ninth district for the purpose of electing a district president. At the death of the district president, the late Mrs. J. E. McElroy, the vice president, Mrs. H. T. Flannigan, of Winder, was urged by both the district board and the state officers to carry on the work as acting president of the district at least until the council meeting in Gainesville. This she finally consented to do, and she threw herself heart and soul into the task of rounding up the year's work. She visited the clubs of the district, she wrote innumerable letters, and she assisted the Gainesville club in the planning for the coming of the state council.

At the call of the acting president, the delegates from the clubs of the ninth district met in the auditorium of Brenau college on Thursday at 2:30 p. m. And Mrs. A. P. Brantley, past state president, at Mrs. Flannigan's request, graciously presided. Mrs. Flannigan then presented her resignation, not only as acting district president, but also as vice president, stating that other imperative duties made it impossible for her longer to serve. In spite of the earnest protests of her friends from all over the district, she insisted that her decision was final and her resignation was accepted with many expressions of deepest regret. Mrs. H. W. Morgan, of Gainesville, was then elected district president, and Mrs. J. P. Cobb, of Ellijay, was elected vice president.

Throughout the meeting of the state council, Mrs. Flannigan, as acting president of the district in which it was meeting, was one of the busiest delegates present, but she met every duty and responsibility with charming grace and efficiency. Her retirement is keenly regretted by the earnest, progressive clubwomen of the ninth district and of the whole state for she has spent eight busy, faithful years in the district work. The first four years she was chairman of child welfare, and the last four she has been the district vice president. She has always been unsparing of time and strength in her efforts to further the work of the federation and she will be greatly missed both in the district work and in the State Federation.

Signed, Mrs. J. B. Parham, of Canton, publicity chairman, ninth district, G. F. W. C.

State Director Urges Attendance At Swampscott

My Dear Club Members:

The biennial council at Swampscott is only a little more than a week ahead. As yet Mrs. Brenner and I have not heard of as many members going as we hoped for, but we are still hoping many will avail themselves of this opportunity to attend the council and have a delightful vacation also. The chairman of transportation has given the schedules and no official route has been designated, delegates being left free to choose the way most convenient to them. We will be disappointed if Georgia is not well represented to hear this fine program.

Calling attention to the resolutions that will come before the general federation council May 28 to June 17, there are eleven that have been sent out for consideration to directors and state federation presidents. The first embraces that the general federation recommend to the president of the United States the appointment of qualified women to administrative and executive positions. Second, that the general federation urge a study of the cultural and domestic problems of different countries of the western hemisphere, thereby making a contribution through like-minded women to the peace of the world.

Furher, that the general federation observe the Sunday immediately preceding Thanksgiving as American Home Sunday, when the clergy will be asked to emphasize in their sermons the importance of religious training in the home.

That the general federation is profoundly interested in the movement for a national university at the seat of government and that a committee be appointed to keep in touch with the proposed legislation for the establishment of such a university.

That the general federation goes on record as favoring the introduction of a sabbatical leave plan in the public schools, both elementary and secondary.

That the general federation indorses the proposed legislation for the establishment of a George Washington Memorial Parkway along the Potomac river.

That the general federation indorses the project of the National Sculpture Society of New York to hold an all-American exhibition of sculpture free to the public at the California palace of the Legion of Honor, in San Francisco, from April of this year through September.

That the general federation protests against the imposition of any tariff or import duty on any art objects, sculptures, paintings, and any other works of are now on the free list.

That the general federation sponsor a movement for the establishing of a national authors' day, this day to be November 1, because Book Week is observed early in November.

That the federation renew its protests against the use of advertising, and urge the restriction of all outdoor advertising to commercial districts.

That the general federation, while recognizing the liberality of appropriations voted by the seventieth congress for the Indian service, considers that an immediate need still exists requiring large additional appropriations and does earnestly petition the granting of such funds by the next congress.

MRS. A. P. BRANTLEY,
of Blackshear, director for Georgia in General Federation.

First Vice President Submits Splendid Report at Council Meet

BY MRS. S. V. SANFORD, of Athens, First Vice President of G. F. W. C.

I herewith submit my report as first vice president to the third biennial convention of the Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs. Perhaps the chief duty of the state first vice president is to enlist the active co-operation of all the district officers and particularly the district first vice presidents in organizing and in federating clubs already organized but not within the fold. If the federation is to grow and function as it must in local and state affairs, then in my judgment greater emphasis should be put on this topic at every district meeting—"The Advantages of Federating." I am told that there are clubs in every district that are doing excellent work, but have not yet federated. There must be a reason. After all, federating depends upon the personal equation of the officers who come in close, personal contact with the members and officers of the unfederated clubs. Perhaps then we have not extended the invitation or we have not explained the need of having all clubs in one great federation. During the year I have had a great deal of correspondence relative to clubs becoming members of the federation either as affiliated or as per capita paying clubs, and I have been impressed with this question—"What are the best reasons we can give the clubs for joining the federation?" It was largely for that reason and further to comply with the wishes of our efficient editor of the club page, Mrs. Stafford, that I wrote an article of some length on "Club Extension and Federation." With the large number of other federations coming rapidly to the front in our state and from the nature of the questions asked by our own club women, it seems to me that my suggestion as to emphasis at the various club meetings on the advantages of becoming identified with the federation should be a live topic. No organization is great or powerful enough to go forward by its own momentum.

Organized in 1896.

The Georgia federation was organized in 1896; it has grown and prospered; but conditions in 1896 were quite different from conditions in 1929—33 years ago, a third of a century. The truth is that everything has changed since the World War. In the early history of the federation, the necessity for federating clubs was not nearly so essential as today. The modern world has become so large and so complex that no individual and no single club or organization of any kind can reach the highest state of efficiency or development without co-operation and fellowship, social or business. Co-operative group work does not destroy individuality but does increase efficiency, and efficiency is the keynote of this particular era. Ability to associate profitably and pleasantly together and to team well without losing identity is the real test of efficiency. If we look around us today we see that big business is everywhere emphasized. It is true that a single enterprise here and there succeeds, but that is the rare exception, and is no doubt due to the exceptional personality at its head. The exception, however, only proves the rule. All are convinced that the small enterprise has had its day and now comes the age of great combines—the chain store, the chain bank, the chain newspaper, the consolidated school, the unification of power plants and railroad systems, and the federation of clubs. All the chains, consolidations, and federations are merely signs of commercialized efficiency.

Say what we may, there is strength in numbers. The greater the membership either as per capita paying members or as affiliated club members, the stronger the state and national federation and the greater the prestige. By taking membership we become shareholders in a wonderful organization. To the extent that I am greatly interested in the financial success of a railroad in which I am a shareholder, to a greater extent I shall be interested in the welfare of the federation, which is not concerned primarily with financial returns, but with the spiritual and moral uplift of the community in which I must live and rear my family, because I am an active shareholder. Beyond membership in such an organization the more one gives in thought and effort, the greater is the return in broadened vision, in inspiration, and in increased devotion to the great work of the federation—work to which we are truly called. The federation is not in need of defense, but of intelligent understanding. If our members are enthusiastic and are filled with a clear knowledge of working details and have a deep sense of appreciation of the force of the federation, then will we see the membership increase and the unaffiliated clubs become affiliated. Passive members cannot bring the federation to the forefront; active, loyal members, who are willing to forget self in the larger good ,will make it even a greater force than it is ,and teach us all the "fine art of living together." No state officer, no set of state officers, can accomplish these things. It depends upon the work, love, and personality of the individual members of the federation. State officers can plan and in a degree furnish the inspiration, but the work of organizing and federating clubs depends upon the membership the team work of the local clubs and the district officers.

Consolidated School.

Before bringing this part of my report to a close, I should like to add this one suggestion: the consolidated school is now the order of the day—the consolidated school is the new center of community life. Here then is a great opportunity for club work—organization of the rural women, if there be any such district as the rural district; better still, organize the women of the consolidated school districts into live, active clubs. We must have the point of view of the women of these districts, if the federation can honestly say it represents the voice of the women of Georgia. The harvest is great, and I trust that before the next annual meeting of this body it will not be said the laborers were few. The old Roman spoke the gospel truth when he said 2,000 years ago, "Life gives nothing to mortals without great labor." The theme of this program at this biennial is "Education—community building." No better theme could have been chosen. Let us then learn fully the objectives of the federation and go forth to build a better community through the power and influence of the many chains of the federation—the individual clubs.

During the year it has been my pleasure to meet with the club women of the second district at Thomasville, the fourth district at Hogansville, the fifth district at East Point, the sixth district at Locust Grove, the seventh district at Cartersville, the eighth district at Royston, the ninth district at Jefferson, the eleventh district at Baxley, the twelfth at Cochran. I could not attend the meeting of the first district at Millen or the tenth district at Augusta because these dates were changed and duties at Athens in connection with the university demanded my attention, and inability to make railroad connections prevented my attending the third district at Fort Gaines. I had the pleasure of being with those clubs last year. It was a great pleasure to meet with these splendid club women and to note the businesslike methods in which they handled the affairs. I wish to thank them for their many courtesies extended to me. During the year I have also had the pleasure of visiting a great many individual clubs. It was fine to see them at work and to realize just what these active women are doing to make a better community and state.

By request I represented the Georgia federation at farmers week at the Georgia State College of Agriculture and spoke on "The Federation and Rural Education." At the request of Mrs. Farmer I sent this talk to our state club editor who kindly published it in full on the club page. On account of the meeting of the press institute of the Georgia Press association with the Henry W. Grady School of Journalism, it was impossible for me to attend the meeting of the executive board—the first meeting I have missed in eight years. My husband had invited so many guests to this press institute that my duties were needed at home.

Clubs Become Members.

During the year the following clubs have become members of the federation, either as affiliated clubs or per capita paying clubs:

Randolph County Georgians, Mrs. Glenn Lockey, president, Cuthbert; The Waycross Woman's club, Mrs. E. Bowmer Dimmock, president, membership 30, Waycross; Junior 20th Century club, Mrs. Will Taylor, president, membership 25, Boston; The Perennial Garden club, Mrs. James R. Beckman, president, membership 25, Atlanta; Atlanta Civic Council of Women, Mrs. J. E. Andrews, president, membership 40, Atlanta; Kill Kare club, Mrs. W. E. Chambers, president, Atlanta; Henry County Federation, Mrs. McDonough; Spring Hill Woman's club, Mrs. J. M. Jenkins, president, membership 10, Smyrna; Cosmopolitan Civic club, Mrs. R. N. Mitchell, president, membership 35, Atlanta; Osteopathic Woman's auxiliary, Mrs. Alexander, president, membership 10, Atlanta; Neighborhood Dramatic club, Miss Julia Vann, president, membership 16, Waycross; Indian Springs Civic league, Mrs. W. B. Powell, president, membership 12, Indian Springs; Tugalo Woman's club, Mrs. Lamar Lipscomb, president, membership 20, Tugalo; Mildred Rutherford Literary society, Mrs. Nina Hunter, president, Membership 200, Athens; Altiora Literary society, Miss Kittie Sellers, president, membership 250, Athens.

Summarizing we have the following:

|---|---|
| 1st District | |
| 2nd District | 2 |
| 3rd District | 1 |
| 4th District | |
| 5th District | |
| 6th District | 3 |
| 7th District | 2 |
| 8th District | 1 |
| 9th District | 2 |
| 10th District | 2 |
| 12th District | 2 |

Mrs. Edith Dimmock was the first to send me an application and the last, Mrs. Kate Hess, president of the fifth district, sent me five applications. All the members of the federation have been faithful and helpful. I desire to call attention of the federation to one very important part of club work that is being overlooked or if not overlooked not utilized. In our educational institutions—our colleges and universities—we have an opportunity to enlist excellent talent in promoting club work. For example, we have two clubs federated at this meeting that I have long desired—two clubs from the Georgia State Teacher's College. These young women are being trained to teach. They are being trained also for leadership. If these young women can make club work a real factor during their college career what marvelous leaders they will become in the objectives for which the federation stands. Merely to become affiliated clubs will be of little value, but if the officers take a pride in these clubs, visit them frequently, and assign them a definite project, it is doubtful if any better club women can be found anywhere. When they go into their respective communities they will join the club or they will organize a club at once. The same is true of those two fine bodies of young women in the university, the Pioneers, and in the State College of Agriculture, the Homecons. Here are four clubs with great potential powers. What will the federation do to make them worth while to continue as members and to utilize them as great moving factors when they have completed their course and entered life's work? Is it not a wise question to ask at this meeting of the biennial: "Should not a supervisor of clubs now existing in our colleges be appointed to direct their work in a channel that will make them the force we should like to have them be and that they desire to be?" We should organize clubs in other colleges as rapidly as possible, provided we give them something worth while to do, or they will get the impression there is no work ahead and they will not be of service in their respective fields. We must think fast or it will be too late.

At the state club institute held at the University of Georgia last July, I spoke on the part the federation was playing in the spiritual development of the state. Here again our kind and considerate state club editor published this article on the club page as information as to another phase of federation work not as often emphasized as other phases. At the club institute, of course, I explained club work and enlisted the support of many in organizing new clubs and federating them as quickly as possible.

Last August I had the pleasure and honor of receiving with Mrs. Ottley, Mrs. Fitzpatrick, Miss Davis, Miss Woodward, Governor and Mrs. Hardman, Mr. and Mrs. Preston Arkwright, Mr. and Mrs. Louie Morris, Dr. and Mrs. Stuart Brown, and others at a very artistic and beautiful reception given in honor of the members of the Georgia Press Association which organization was holding one of its sessions at Press Haven. I never attended a more beautiful reception and I was charmed to see so many members of the Press Association and so many club women present at the reception to inspect the Tallulah Falls Industrial school. It was a happy thought on the part of Mrs. Ottley to have this reception at the school so that the members of the press could have firsthand information and not have to depend on hearsay evidence concerning this wonderful school. The only way to know what has been accomplished and what is being done is to visit the school. I know what the school is and what it is doing, and for that reason I have no hesitancy in saying that it is the federation's greatest asset. I am so pleased to know that our people and enthusiastic chairman of junior clubs has made such great progress in her work during the year. Junior work is very important and we must give Mrs. Horn support and encouragement.

It may be vanity and out of taste, but I am extremely proud of this record in club extension and federation during my first experience in this new field of endeavor. However, as now conducted the work is far from pleasant and far from satisfactory to all parties concerned. There should be changes to make this work efficient and modern. The first method now have had its virtues in the early days of the federation, but I fail to see anything but a cumbersome machine at present—a machine far out of date. If a person is competent to hold the office of first vice president she ought to be competent to admit clubs without the process now in vogue. Life is too short for our present methods. The present plan is also one of great delay, no matter how efficient the members of any committee may be. It is not expected that members of a committee will always be at home or always at liberty to attend to routine machinery—particularly when there is no necessity for it. My committee has been very faithful and prompt and I desire to extend them at this time my sincere appreciation.

Suggestion Made.

My suggestion is this: All applications for membership shall be sent direct to the first vice president, and if the club fulfills all requirements as set forth in the constitution and by-laws, then the club shall be admitted to membership; if any doubt exists on the part of the first vice president, she shall then submit the application for approval or disapproval to the committee as now constituted. All applications for membership shall have the signature of the first vice president and the treasurer; exceptional cases the signatures of the first vice president, the recording secretary, the state federation director, and the treasurer.

My second suggestion is this: The federation shall have prepared an official notification card to be sent immediately to the president of the club informing her that the new club has been accepted and is now either an affiliated club or a per-capita paying club. By this plan the president of the new club will have this information within 24 hours instead of an indefinite delay—a delay that cannot be presented by the present unbusiness like method. To all the state and district officers and to all the club members I wish to express appreciation for their kindly co-operation and for their many courtesies.

Respectfully submitted,
GRACE M. SANFORD,
First Vice President.

Fort Gaines Club Garden Division Sponsors Show

Flower lovers in Clay county were given a treat last Friday when the garden division of the Fort Gaines Woman's Club held its second annual flower show at their beautiful clubhouse Cornelia on the banks of the Chattahoochee river. At the invitation of the local club, the Bluffton Garden Club joined in the show and swelled it to gigantic proportions. There was a marked improvement in the quality of the blossoms over those displayed last year, giving evidence of a quickened interest in flower culture as the result of the activities of the county's two garden clubs. The exhibits were not limited to the exotic blossoms of finer culture, however, nor were the finest flowers the recipients of the greatest praise. A wild flower exhibit, open to school children, was the most truly amazing of any on display, 75 varieties of native wild flowers being shown in the prize-winning collection. Out-of-town exhibitors and guests were entertained at the clubhouse at noon with a picnic lunch. Mrs. Charles King and Mrs. W. S. McWilliams, of the Cuthbert Garden Club, very courteously served as judges of the exhibits.

Officers of the local club and those in charge of the exhibit were Mrs. W. T. Credille, president Fort Gaines Woman's Club; Mrs. C. L. McLendon, Garden club chairman; Mrs. J. E. Melton, flower show chairman; Mesdames W. L. Paullin, S. D. Coleman and M. M. Padgett, arrangement committee for the local club. The Bluffton Garden Club is under the presidency of Mrs. Marcellus Davis who, with Mrs. Stafford Rambo and Mrs. Charles Sanders, made a very efficient committee from the neighboring club. The music division of the Fort Gaines Woman's Club, of which Mrs. W. C. Chambers is chairman, took this occasion to observe national Music Week, and rendered an excellent program of appropriate springtime music during the afternoon, with the following numbers:

Piano solo, "Hark, Hark the Lark," Shubert—Mrs. J. H. Kissack; vocal duet, "Oh, That We Two Were Maying," Nevin—Misses Elizabeth and Edwina Arnold; reading, "Garden Sass," Susanne Warren—Ann Elizabeth Gwynn; violin solo, selected—Mrs. Eugene Sutton; vocal solo, selected—Miss Roberta Irwin; reading, "The Rose," Erie Greene; vocal duet, "In the Garden of My Heart," Roma—Mrs. Coleman and Mrs. Arnold; piano duet, "Narcissus," Nevin—Mrs. Chambers and Mrs. Stone.

Inman Pre-School Circle To Meet.

Mrs. LeRoy Michael, formerly Miss Katherine Shaw, will give one of her interesting talks at the May meeting of the pre-school circle of S. M. Inman school.

Mrs. Michael was at one time head of the nursery school, Georgia State College of Agriculture at Athens, Ga. The meeting will be Tuesday, May 21, at 3 o'clock in Miss Pritchard's room. The school orchestra will be another interesting part of the program. At the close of the program a social hour will be enjoyed.

W. C. T. U. Board Makes Plans at Meeting in Macon

BY M. FRANCES MEADORS BURGHARD.

The mid-year meeting of the official board of the Georgia Woman's Christian Temperance Union was held in Macon Wednesday and Thursday. The entire time was devoted strictly to business—discussing and deciding affairs connected with the state headquarters, the state convention to be held in Atlanta in the fall, finances, membership, publications, organizers, institutes, departmental activities and the general work and welfare of the organization and the cause toward which its efforts are directed.

The board consists of the general officers, Mrs. Marvin Williams, of Barnesville, state president, who presided; Mrs. Dudley Smith, of Eastman, vice president; Mrs. Mary Scott Russell, of Macon, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Frank T. Brown, of Cairo, recording secretary; Mrs. J. L. McGarity, of Monroe, treasurer; Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, of Greenville, advisory; Mrs. August Burghard, of Macon, editor the Georgia W. C. T. U. Bulletin; Mrs. R. H. McDougall, Jr., Atlanta, secretary children's temperance work, and the district presidents, first, Mrs. C. C. Mordecai, Savannah; second, Mrs. Berta G. Scott, Bainbridge; third, Mrs. R. E. Hearn, Americus; fourth, Mrs. T. D. Power, Columbus; fifth, Mrs. O. L. Taylor, Atlanta; sixth, Mrs. Wilber Brown, Griffin; seventh, Mrs. J. W. L. Brown, Cartersville; eighth, Mrs. W. P. Perry, Monroe; ninth, Mrs. John E. Epperson, Canton; tenth, Mrs. Hattie Rogers, Sandersville; eleventh, Mrs. J. O. Ward, Blackshear, and twelfth, Mrs. J. I. Hargrove, Chauncey.

Mrs. Armor Lectures.

"There is a tremendous prohibition sentiment in New York state," writes Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, of Greenville, International W. C. T. U. speaker, who has been touring that state speaking once or twice a day for several weeks. Reports have reached us of two of her meetings. Both were described as "great meetings—great crowds, great enthusiasm and a great speaker." The one at Penn Yan Sunday night was held in the largest auditorium, the theater, when all the churches combined in a great union service to hear this famed Georgia orator. The report says that the house was packed, "many were turned away and hundreds stood through the entire meeting, including the collection. At the close throngs crowded about the front to shake hands with the speaker who had stirred them deeply."

Speaks at New York Capital.

Wednesday night she spoke in Albany, the New York capital, on the W. C. T. U. slogan: "Give Prohibition a Chance." Mrs. Armor said of the church where she spoke: "There was a magnificent audience in the most beautiful church I have seen in America (and she has spoken on prohibition in hundreds, yes, thousands of them, some in every state in the United States) 150 years old, of pure Gothic architecture, carved pews and beautiful woodwork and the loveliest windows. I never saw more harmonious coloring nor more beautiful architecture in Europe."

She was introduced as "a democrat from Georgia who voted the republican ticket last fall." But she brought down the house when she replied, "I did not vote the republican ticket last fall. I am not a republican, but a Hoover democrat. I voted for Mr. Hoover, not because he was a republican, but because he was God's man, and I voted the straight democratic ticket so far as the state was concerned." She is quoted as saying, "the liquor traffic's day lasted 10,000 years, and in all that time it never did one good thing, did not help but always hurt. I promise you that if after 10,000 years prohibition has not done any more good than the liquor traffic has done in 10,000 I will vote wet." It took Mrs. Armor almost an hour to get away from the church so many wanted to shake her hand and commend her speech and promise co-operation in giving prohibition a chance. Mrs. Armor's New York itinerary will continue a week or more longer. She is to address a great meeting in Toronto, Canada, and make the commencement address at Asbury college, where she is a trustee, at Nilmore, Ky., before returning to Georgia.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union appeals to its membership to continue to contribute liberally to the relief of the several communities in the state recently stricken by storm and flood. Contributions may go through the local Red Cross or Salvation Army or may be sent direct to the state director of Flower Mission and Relief, Mrs. W. H. Preston, 121 Georgia avenue, S. W., Atlanta, Ga. Report all contributions already given and which may be given to the local flower mission and relief work director.

PROBE INTO RATES ON COTTONSEED CONCLUDED HERE

Investigation of cottonseed products rates by the Interstate commerce commission was brought to conclusion at the Atlanta Biltmore hotel Saturday after study of the situation by the commission over a period of two years.

Kilpatrick, corresponding secretary; Mrs. G. P. Sasser, auditor. The election was held at the home of Mrs. Leaver Richardson on Virginia avenue, and during the year members sewed for the Home of the Friendless, making 66 new garments and repairing 22 garments for the children. This work was under the leadership of Mrs. W. A. Waldman, chairman. Mrs. E. D. Thomas, chairman for infant layette, reported 34 garments made and contributed by the members of the club to the Junior Needlework Guild. Other activities to add to the cheer or comfort of others have been visits and books for the Old Ladies' Home; also visits and contributions of magazines, flowers, books, fruits cigarets and such other things as add to the pleasure of the boys at Hospital No. 48. Mrs. Dreyfus reported contributions to charity of $10 apiece to the Atlanta and Florida flood relief; response to calls from Atlanta Federation of Clubs; co-operation with local Boy Scout Troops; encouraging good citizenship and mutual helpfulness among residents of the community and adjoining communities and the voting of $10 to relief of storm-stricken people of Georgia.

A picnic will be given at Piedmont park Tuesday, June 18, sponsored by North Boulevard Park Civic League and the Boulevard Park Woman's Club. M. L. Clifton, retiring vice president, was chairman of the sale of rose leaves from a bush at the Home of the Friendless, funds received to go toward giving the girls who work in the home a vacation. Thirty-eight leaves were sold to members, netting $9.50. New officers will be installed at the June meeting held at the home of Mrs. E. D. Thomas, 1196 Boulevard, N. E. Besides the general civic activities for community improvement the club members are encouraging attractive rear gardens and emphasizing the importance of beautiful grounds as the proper home setting. Personal visits to the small gardens are made by the members and exchange of plants creates a spirit of friendly mutual interest and co-operation.

'GENTLEMEN OF PRESS' ON HOWARD SCREEN

"Gentlemen of the Press," the sensational stage success from the pen of Ward Morehouse, formerly a member of Atlanta's newspaper fraternity, has been brought to the talking screen by Paramount and made into one of the most appealing productions offered by the Howard this season. Into his play, culled from long years of experience in the realm of printer's ink in Atlanta and elsewhere, Morehouse has woven a penetrating, humorous and touching story, typical of newspaper life.

Critics acclaimed the stage play as the most authentic showing of newspaper atmosphere ever captured for the theater, irresistible for its truth and fascination." The cinema version faithfully follows the stage play, never losing track of the fact, which Morehouse accentuated, that newspapermen and the life they live is an absorbingly interesting subject, one that for sheer intensity and drama offers exceptional entertainment.

Walter Huston, recognized as one of the foremost character actors on the stage today, plays the leading role, that of Wickland Snell, veteran newspaperman, hardened and cynical, but withal a sympathetic, honest man and a devoted father. The name of Walter Huston, it will be remembered, is associated with some of the most forceful and brilliant Broadway successes, among which are "Miss Lulu Bett," "The Barker" and 'Desire Under the Elms." Playing his first role in motion pictures, the star brings to the screen the same insight into character interpretation that has distinguished his performances behind the footlights.

"Gentlemen of the Press" tells one of the most human stories seen on the screen, a drama depicting the life of a man caught by the fascination and love of the press, this love coming to surmount even that of a devoted father. During 20 years in and about the bustle of the paper's city room, he has seen much of life; he has witnessed triumph and moments of great happiness. But also has he observed life stripped of all glamor. Cynical though he is, underneath the brusque exterior, he is a sentimentalist. Women, too, play and have played an important part in his life.

As this character, Walter Huston gives what many consider one of the finest performances seen on the speaking screen during the past season.

A strong supporting cast includes the well-known Broadway comedian, Charles Ruggles, now playing in the stage success, "Spring Is Here." Katherine Francis and Betty Lawford.

Also on the program the Howard presents Ruth Etting, a songland favorite, who sings "That's Him Now" and "My Mother's Eyes;" a clever Paramount act, Vitaphone overture, "Raymond" and Paramount News.

Psychology Session.

'TRIAL OF MARY DUGAN' SEEN ON CAPITOL SCREEN

What is perhaps the most dramatic play of many seasons, a smashing hit on Broadway and now being produced throughout the country through the medium of "road shows," will be seen and heard this week on the screen at Loew's Capitol in the sound picture presentation of "The Trial of Mary Dugan." No more intense drama has been brought to the stage or to the films in many years.

Bayard Veiller, author of the absorbing story, directed the picture as to photography, dramatization and dialogue, thereby bringing to the screen version all of the power that characterized the stage production. Norma Shearer, in the role of Mary Dugan, is said to give one of the most powerful characterizations of her career, her voice registering with remarkable clarity and adding immeasurably to the dramatic intensity of the part.

The unraveling of a horrible murder mystery, and the shifting of guilt from a Broadway butterfly to the man whom she had employed to defend her in court, constitute the outstanding features of the story, which is told with a simple directness that is startling and astonishing. The denouement, in which the real slayer is discovered through the cleverness of Mary Dugan's brother, leaves the audience fairly gasping.

"The Trial of Mary Dugan" ran for many months on Broadway and four road companies are now producing it on the road in this country, with other productions operating on the continent. It ranks with the best melodramatic successes of recent years.

In assembling the cast for this Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer achievement, the author-director, Mr. Veiller, chose such stars as Raymond Hackett, Lewis Stone, H. B. Warner, Lilyan Tashman and many others to supplement Miss hearer's work in the title role. Their portrayal of their parts and particularly the dialogue in which they engage is considered remarkable by theatrical critics generally.

The annual per capita use of paper in the United States is 180 pounds; in China the per capita use is less than one-half pound.

'BLACK WATERS' IS NEW RIALTO TALKING FILM

Clark and McCullough Also Seen in Great Comedy.

The experiences of Marshall Neilan as an actor, and long an outstanding screen director, came in handy recently when he was called upon to direct his first talking picture.

Known wherever motion pictures are shown as a director of strong, virile, photoplays, very few persons are aware that Neilan was at one time on the stage. But he was back in the days when melodrama was popular, and the crowds in the gallery cheered the heroine who had a heart of gold and hissed the villain who pursued her.

Recently Neilan was engaged to direct "Black Waters," a thrilling mystery story adapted from the stage success "Fog," by John Williard, who also wrote "The Cat and the Canary." It was here that the director's melodrama days came into good play, for "Black Waters" is a modern and high-class melodrama of the San Francisco waterfront done in dialogue, and only a man who had actual melodrama experience could put it over as it should be.

The result is that "Black Waters," which comes to the Rialto theater tomorrow, is said to be the best to date of the all-talking photoplays.

After leaving the stage, Neilan went with the company of D. W. Griffith, and appeared as a screen actor in several pictures under the direction of that master of screen craft. His first directorial job was in making a picture with Ruth Roland, and he has since had many outstanding successes to his credit. Among them are "Tess of the D'Urbervilles" with Blanche Sweet; Mary Pickford in "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," "The Sporting Venus," "Mike" and "Wild Oats Lane."

In addition, Clark and McCullough will be seen in a tabloid musical comedy with Lois Moran.

"The Belle of Samoa" is a 100 per cent talking, singing and dancing tabloid musical comedy. It has Lois Moran in the role of a daughter of Samoa, and she departs from her usual dramatic portrayals to sing and to dance in an inimitable manner. It has Clark and McCullough as chief suppliers of humor, and they have lines which they never have excelled in wisecracking quality. It has Filoi, original Samoan dancer, who, with her company of 60 native steppers, brings a unique exotic feature to the screen.

Priests of the Maori tribes in New Zealand were not allowed to touch food with their hands at certain times, and so had to be fed.

'Shady Lady,' Met Film, Stars Phyllis Haver

Phyllis Haver adds another screen success to her credit in "The Shady Lady," in which she is seen and heard this week at the Metropolitan. Always entertaining and very much an actress, the star has a rather difficult role in "The Shady Lady," but performs remarkably well.

The story is that of a girl who is innocently involved in a crime in New York and is forced to flee under an assumed name to a foreign country. She picks Havana, Cuba, as the place where she would most likely not be recognized, and there sets up habitation.

She is recognized by an old-time gangster from New York, who tells her he knows her and threatens to disclose her identity unless she agrees to his terms. He is a rum runner and wants her to act as a decoy to trap a man who is interfering with his plans. She has to agree, and then becomes "the shady lady."

Louis Wolheim and Robert Armstrong are the two leading men in the picture.

All scenes are taken in Cuba and are very beautiful; the picture moves fastly to an extremely thrilling climax and has a surprise ending that adds to the excellent entertainment.

The short program at the Metropolitan this week are most excellent, an Our Gang Comedy, "School Begins," heads the list, followed by Sanderson and Crumit, excellent entertainers, and Fox Movitone News.

PONCE DE LEON

Amateur Night and Big Film Bill Seen.

Featured by an unusually attractive "amateur night" program Friday night, the program of the Ponce de Leon theater this week offers four outstanding successes in the movie field, according to announcement Saturday by the Swint & Davis management of the popular community playhouse at Ponce de Leon avenue and Boulevard.

The screen program opens Monday with "Virgin Lips," a Columbia production starring John Boles and Olive Borden, on the screen. Outlawry, passionate love and daring deeds mark this splendid opening offering. For showing Tuesday and Wednesday, the Ponce de Leon has secured "The Woman Disputed," with the ever-popular Norma Talmadge in a United Artists picture with sound and music.

Thursday and Friday's screen program will be "The Michigan Kid," with Renee Adoree and Conrad Nagel starring Universal's gripping story of the gold rush. Friday night the leading amateur talent of the city will participate in the regular "amateur night" program.

Saturday's picture will be the famous "Red Skin," with Richard Dix in an epic of the early west.

West End.

Vilma Banky in "The Awakening" is the feature picture at the West End theater on Monday and Tuesday. This picture has all the romantic ardor, the thrills, and the pictorial effect which makes it entertainment of the very first order. Miss Banky's performance more than justifies Producer Goldwyn's decision to raise her to the rank of a star.

On Wednesday, Thomas Meighan, Evelyn Brent and Renee Adoree will be seen in "The Mating Call." The wonder serial, "Tarzan the Mighty," will also be offered on Wednesday. John Gilbert in "Desert Nights" will be the feature attraction on Thursday and Friday. Milton Sills in "The Crash," will be offered on Saturday with "The Fire Detective," a new serial, also a travelogue as added attractions.

'THE COMMAND TO LOVE' NEW PLAY AT ATLANTA

"The Command to Love," an adroit comedy of diplomacy and intrigue in the Spanish court, will be the offering of the Fulenwider All-Star Players this week at the Atlanta theater.

This impudent and audacious play, which recently closed a full year's run in New York, has been unanimously voted by critics as one of the most entertaining comedies of the season.

It tells the piquant story of the dutiful indiscretions of a handsome military attache of the French embassy at Madrid. Soldiers are usually expected to die for their countries, but the gallant Marquis de Saint Lac was commanded to make love for his country and the lady chosen as the object of his attentions was the wife of a high Spanish official.

A treaty which the French were eager to make with Spain lay in the balance. The French ambassador saw that the Spanish war minister's wife controlled the situation.

So he commanded his handsome attache to make love to this lovely, yearning creature, in order to make sure she would give her influence toward the signing of the treaty.

That might have all been very well, if the young attache had not been already in love with his superior's wife, who happened to be an extremely jealous woman.

In a most perilous situation, surrounded by suspicious husbands, lovely ladies, and a jealous court, the suave and debonair young marquis keeps his head.

Alamo No. 2.

Irene Rich has the greatest part of her career as the charming widow who uses her charms to win from her flapper daughter the men of wealth and years who try to win her. It is only when her mother explains her reasons that the youngster forgives what seemed to her unpardonable conduct on her parent's part. The story has a background of brilliant coloring, and smartness.

The women of the cast wear beautiful creations. "The Silver Slave" is a masterpiece of modern life. The strong cast includes Audrey Ferris, one of the most beautiful of the newer Hollywood lights—Holmes Herbert, John Miljan, and Carrol Nye. The story is by Howard Smith and the scenarization was done by Peter Milne. Howard Bretherton directed. "The Silver Slave," starring Irene Rich," comes to the Alamo No. 2 theater Monday.

'OLD SOUTH' TURN HEADS CAPITOL BILL

Memories of the old south will be revived this week at Loew's Capitol, where Nancy Gibbs, star of musical comedy successes, appears in the feature stage act, "Dear Little Rebel," which headlines the program of Loew vaudeville presented along with the screen attraction, "The Trial of Mary Dugan."

A musical romance of the ante-bellum days that develops a sparkling sequence recalling the stirring days of the '60s, "Dear Little Rebel" constitues an elaborately costumed operetta in which a cast of ten persons participate. The production is attractively staged and contains a wealth of splendid harmony.

"Music Glorified, Classified and Mortified" is the way Coscia and Verdi, two talented musicians, style their unique act, which includes not only a pleasing repertoire of classical and popular selections, but also a vein of hilarious comedy, as the final adjective in the title of the act might indicate.

An exhibition of eccentric and burlesque dancing, along with a line of snappy chatter and some entertaining songs, is the offering of Charlie Wilkens and company. Wilkens is said to be one of the outstanding exponents of the art of eccentric dancing.

Breen, LaBard and Barry have an entertaining dancing turn, while Joe and Ida St. John present a novelty act that includes aerial work and skillful feats on the flying rings.

Loew's Grand.

Atlanta theater patrons who missed "Show Boat" during its two weeks' run at Loew's Capitol recently will have another opportunity to see and hear this remarkable sound film production this week at Loew's Grand, where it will be the principal screen attraction.

"Show Boat," the picturization of Edna Ferber's popular novel, is regarded as one of the premier achievements in sound motion picture production, combining the elements of drama, scenic investiture, comedy and music so happily as to constitute a really remarkable ensemble. It is unusual in that so many elaborate features are introduced in a single motion picture, but in "Show Boat" there is a lavishness of historical detail and musical interpolation truly astonishing.

Some of the most popular features of the Zeigfeld production of the same name have been translated into the screen version of "Show Boat," notably such numbers as "Hey, Feller" and "Old Man River," sung by choruses of negro singers.

STAN STANLEY HEADS NEW GEORGIA BILL

Another five-act bill of Keith vaudeville will grace the stage at Keith's Georgia this week a bill that contains variety, youth, comedy, speed and pep, with that famous laugh creator Stan Stanley holding the headline position.

The gentleman that commented that there is nothing new under the sun, undoubtedly spoke a fact. But the thing is whether new or old, its how it is done. Now take Stan Stanley for instance. He is versatile as well as a capable comedian. He is still doing the audience acts but it has so many new clothes that it is really something different. This season he calls it the "Boarder." It has something to do with a lodger and his fair feminine landlord. If Mr. Stanley has succeeded in nothing else, he has succeeded in multiplying the number of laughs that he offers—which is an actual accomplishment.

Miss Hope Vernon, international musical comedy prima donna, furnishes some songs and also a little bundle of artistic tricks. Wherever musical comedy is a part of a nation's amusement bill of fare, Hope Vernon is known.

In "An Original Comedy Oddity" presented by Stutz and Bingham is comedy singing and talking. Comedy of the birght breezy kind; singing of the lilting melodious kind; by players of the thoroughly likeable kind.

Hatt and Herman offer a gymnastic novelty called "Modified Training." In "Modified Training," they present a trampoline routine, bounding about executing a number of intricate gyrations; often turning these into good comedy effects.

The Libby Dancers in "Sports A la Mode" interpret various sports by dancing. Here indeed are sports as you like them—truthfully a kaleidescope of youth, beauty, speed, humor and originality. The program includes such novelties as "Aesops Fables in person" and an intricate and clever bit of adagio.

Donated Fortune in Shoe, But Search Recovers It

San Francisco—The fun started when Mrs. A. J. Jadig discovered her husband had hidden her diamond ring and his diamond stickpin in an old shoe—the old shoe she gave to the Salvation Army two days before.

The brogan search that followed Mrs. Jadig's discovery surpassed in excitement the annual city Easter egg hunts by far and was successful.

Salvation Army workers found the shoe among thousands of others, and what was better—the $3,500 worth of jewelry.

WILLIAM N. WOLFSON RISES TO MANAGERSHIP

Popular Howard Official Goes to Strand Theater, Montgomery.

BY ELMO HAMBY.

Promoted to managership within a short few months since his graduation from the Publix Training School for Managers, William N. Wolfson, for the past several months assistant manager of the Howard theater, will leave Atlanta tonight for Montgomery, Ala., where he will take over the Strand theater, according to announcement Saturday from the offices of Willard C. Patterson, district manager for Publix theaters.

WILLIAM N. WOLFSON.

Now, with the first paragraph off the chest, and the news disposed of, we can now proceed to run the gauntlet of libel, defamy, murder, arson and slander by letting the public in on the lowdown about this big cactus, burr, tequila and .45 man from Texas.

Somebody way back when the Alamo was a fort instead of a theater, first made the observation that there seemed to be a peculiar affinity between the folks of Texas and Georgia and that, transplanted from one state to the other, natives prospered in high popularity.

And somehow it always figured out that way, with "Wolfie's" case as the best and most current example. A graduate of the University of Texas, where he was a prominent member of the Glee and Whoopee Clubs, Mr. Wolfson entered the last class of the Publix school and was graduated the past fall.

He was assigned to the Howard theater, where his work was of such a high type that it has earned for him a promotion to a managerial chair in record time. In addition, he found time to establish himself as one of the most popular theatrical men in Atlanta.

He is one of our most prominent Clarker and McCulloughers, and very probably will spend the majority of his time in Montgomery trying to pep some booking agent into shipping him all the latest versions of Clarking and McCulloughing.

And if good wishes of Atlantans who know him have anything to do with it, then he'll get Clark and McCullough in person!

Plus many more of 'em, Wolfie—good luck to you!

Health Centers.

Dr. J. P. Kennedy, city health officer, Saturday announced the baby health centers for the week as follows: Wednesday, May 22, St. Paul church; Thursday, May 23, Edgewood school; Friday, May 24, Faith school. Mothers are invited to bring their children up to the age of four years. All centers begin promptly at 1:30 p. m.

The city of Monte Carlo levies no taxes because the gambling profits are sufficient to pay the municipal expenses.

NEW GEORGIA FILM 'DANGEROUS WOMAN'

"A Dangerous Woman," Paramount's all-talking drama is the feature attraction at the Georgia theatre this week. This is the first African all-talking film with all-talking experienced and stage-experienced actors to appear on any local screen. It has everything—authentic African atmosphere, dramtic plot, romance, comedy and unparalleled acting.

The story of "A Dangerous Woman," is based upon a tense, absorbing tale of the jungle country, by Margery H. Lawrence which appeared in Cosmopolitan magazine. It deals with a modern Russian woman who falls under the dreamy, romantic spell of primeval Africa and turns her love-energies to a veritable stalking of all the white men who come within her ken in the out-post village in which she lives. She captures the hearts of each in turn, relinquishing each former victim for the thrill of ensnaring a new one.

Baclanova, Russian dramatic artiste, formerly with the Moscow Art theater, and lately a tremendous success in "The Wolf of Wall Street," plays the title role in her own inimitable, exotic manner. Clive Brook, Neil Hamilton and Leslie Fenton are the handsome colonial residenters who fall captive before the romantic onslaughters of the siren.

Snitz Edwards and Clyde Cook give lavishly of their talents in producing the comedy-relief.

"A dangerous Woman" needs nothing more to make it one of the most amazing of audible pictures yet seen at the Georgia theater. Don't miss it.

"Kisses" all-talking short comedy with John Litel, former Atlanta stock company player and "Humorous Flights" a Paramount comedy completes the picture part of the program.

BIG BILL AT EMPIRE

"Amateur Night" Again Feature With Pictures.

Another great bill of pictures is slated for the Empire theater, Georgia avenue and Crew street, this week, where Manager Alpha Fowler also will feature another big "Amateur Night" on Friday night of the week. Included on the list of pictures for current showing are "My Man," "Simba," "The Cameraman," and "Lost at the Front."

Fannie Brice, one of the greatest of all musical comedy stars, will be featured in her Vitaphone smash hit, "My Man," on Monday and Tuesday at the Empire. On this picture's first run at a larger downtown theater, capacity crowds acclaimed this star of the stage in her first talking picture feature. "My Man" is sung several times by Miss Brice in the course of the picture, in addition to a number of clever comedy songs.

The Martin Johnson epic of the wilds of Africa, "Simba," is scheduled for Wednesday and Thursday's showing at the Empire. Several years in the making, every foot of this film was "shot" in Africa by the Martin Johnson expedition and some of the most startling camera shots ever made are included in the picture.

Buster Keaton, solemn-faced comic of the cinema, will be seen in "The Cameraman" on Friday, while "Lost at the Front," with Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton, will be the feature for Saturday.

Cameo.

"China Bound," the newest Karl Dane and George K. Arthur release, opens the week at the Cameo for a Monday and Tuesday showing. This picture has rightly been called a shipload of laughs. With a succession of wallops which keep the audience holding itself around the waist line, Dane and Arthur score another giggle kayo.

"Craig's Wife," the Wednesday and Thursday feature, is a William C. DeMille production. The story is taken from George Kelly's stage play, which was a Pulitzer prize winner. Irene Rich and Warner Baxter have the leading roles. It has been made into a dramatic, tenseful, thrilling and appealing picture.

"Sunset Pass," showing Friday and Saturday, is the latest roaring romance from the pen of Zane Grey. Jack Holt, Zane Grey's own choice of a hero for his he-man stories, has the leading role. Holt plays the part of a United States marshal out to round up a bad band of cattle rustlers.

UPLAND FRUIT BELT TOURED!

On the beautiful stretch of road just out of Cornelia.

The monument erected by the civic clubs of Cornelia to the "big red apple." It stands right in the center of town on the property of the Southern railroad.

One of the reasons our trip was so successful — Miss Jessie Lee Barnes, of Atlanta, a member of our party and her bouquet of mountain laurel and rhododendron.

Cornelia, Home of the Elberta Peach And Big Red Apple, Objective of Tour

Decatur, Lawrenceville, Buford, Gainesville on Route — Motor Party Climbs to Top of Tower Mountain on Sight-Seeing Ride.

By H. McCoy Van Devender,
Automobile Editor.

Last Sunday The Constitution's motor party were guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Stewart, owners of the famous Commercial hotel at Cornelia, Ga.

We headed our car out Ponce de Leon avenue to Decatur, turning to the left at the new Candler hotel, on the paved road to Lawrenceville and Buford, two pretty little Georgia cities. Just this side of Gainesville we came upon the Chip-O-Wee mills, one of the Johnson & Johnson units..

Gainesville is a beautiful little city, having as additional interesting points Brenau college and Riverside Military academy.

Two smiling faces that will greet you in Cornelia. They are Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Stewart, owners of the famous Commercial hotel there —an institution chockfull of real southern hospitality.

The spacious veranda of the Commercial hotel at Cornelia. The grounds of this hostelry are beautiful.

After leaving Gainesville we passed the beautiful White Sulphur Springs, one of the south's oldest summer resorts. Passing many small towns and magnificent country places, we came to Cornelia, the home of Elberta peaches and the "big red apple" that contribute so materially to the wealth of the South's Empire state.

Cornelia is situated in the midst of a chain of mountain on which are some of the finest apple orchards in America. We had the pleasure of visiting the farm of H. R. Staight, who holds the distinction of being one of Georgia's 12 "master farmers." His apple orchard is one of the largest and finest in the section, fruit from which has brought fame to both him and north Georgia.

In all, we covered 80 miles sightseeing around Cornelia. There are a score of places to interest one. Mr. and Mrs. Stewart took us to Tower mountain, which is easily accessible and should be one of Georgia's show places. The ride to the top of Tower mountain carries one through an enormous fruit orchard, with laurel and rhododendron convering woodlands on all sides. On the top of the mountain is a summer home with its fertile garden patch. From here it is said one can see practically a third of the state of Georgia.

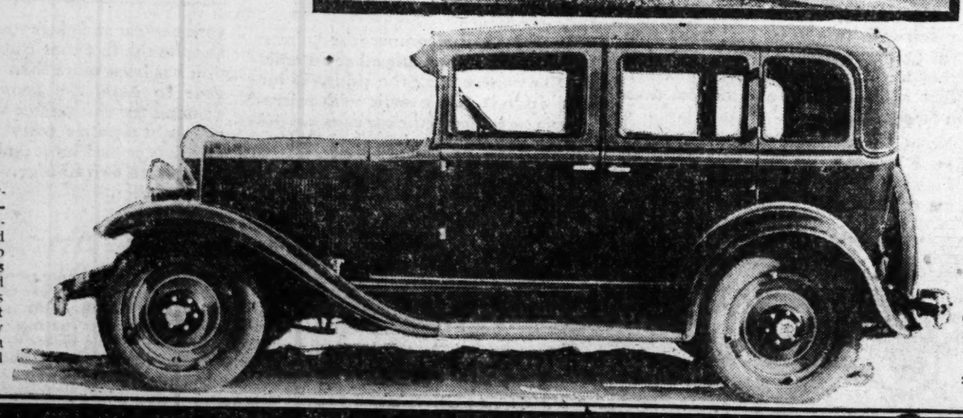

On the descent we found a spot where we could stand and look into three states—Georgia, North and South Carolina.

The Commercial hotel at Cornelia is famous for its fare. We arrived a full hour past the regular dinner time and had just as much white meat off the chicken as though we had been expected guests. Cornelia should be proud of this hotel, for it offers the accommodations and conveniences of large city hostelries.

The roads are in excellent condition, being paved all the way to Gainesville, with the exception of six miles between Lawrenceville and Buford. This, however, is sand gravel and can be traveled in any sort of weather.

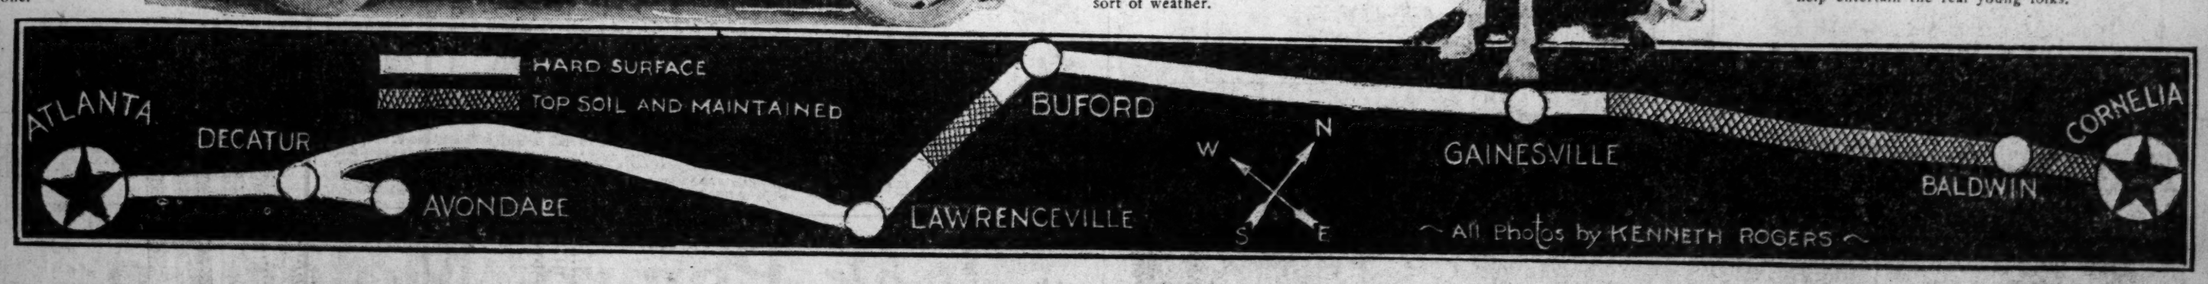

We paused here to take a look. At this point one can see into three states. It is from the top of Tower mountain.

This new Chevrolet six sedan—our transportation. We found this little car to be everything its makers claim, and then some. Its speed, comfort and flexibility made our trip a most successful one.

A familiar sight around the Commercial hotel. It shows Master Philip Stewart and his pony. They help entertain the real young folks.

RACING CARS WILL REVERT TO TWO-MAN TYPE

Radical Change Inaugurated To Enable Speedways To Serve As Aids to Modern Motor Cars

Tiny One-Man Racers of Today Too Finely Groomed to Aid Solution of Problems of Stock Passenger Cars, Indianapolis Speedway Officials Agree.

By E. Y. Watson.

Written Exclusively for The Constitution and the North American Newspaper Alliance.
(Copyright, 1929, by the North American Newspaper Alliance.)

Detroit, Mich., May 18.—To improve design, performance and economy of the modern passenger automobile, the powers that govern automobile racing in the United States are soon to venture on a radical change.

May 30, at Indianapolis, the tiny one-man cars of 91 cubic inch cylinder displacement will face the wire for the last time on this speedway, which for 20 years has been what newspapermen often refer to as "the crucible in which motor cars are refined." The result of the tests there has been continuous development of a racing strain, which may be likened to improvement of the breed in race horses.

"The racing car of today," says W. D. Edenburn, member of the contest board of the American Automobile Association, "is like the race horse. It has been bred so fine that it is no longer any good for draught work or passenger work.

Back to Two-Man Type.

"Next year, therefore, racing will go back to the two-man type of car with limits on size of engines modified so as to bring the cars within the class commonly used on the highways by the average motorist."

This year will be the eleventh consecutive time Mr. Edenburn has been in charge of the annual 500-mile contest. He has been connected in various capacities with the running of every race since the beginning, in 1909.

In 1911 came the victory of Ray Harroun, in the Marmon "Wasp," a car displacing 447 cubic inches and averaging 74 miles an hour for the distance. Comparing that with the performance of the car which won in 1925 gives some idea of what has been achieved. In 1925 Peter de Paolo, holder of the present 500-mile mark for Indianapolis, came in ahead, having averaged 101.13 miles an hour.

Harroun's car was not the older two-man type which carries mechanician as well as driver. Harroun rode alone, with a rear-view mirror as his mechanic. De Paolo's was the immediate predecessor of the 91-inch car of today. It displaced 122 inches in all. Since the tiny 91s have been in use, De Paolo's time has not been equalled, but it has been closely approached.

New Record Seen.

This being the fourth year for the 91 inch class, the hope is that the "vest pocket" power pilots will follow suit and set the record higher. Mr. Edenburg is confident they will. It is significant, in his opinion, that in 1911, the year of the first race that began the history of gasoline speed, there were 46 entries. For this year's contest there are the same number.

It being deemed impractical, if not impossible, to reduce engine sizes further with the hope of gaining anything worth while in research, the year 1930 will see race cars revert to type as fast common carriers of humanity.

The new two-man racers the regulations call for will have power plants that parallel in size those of the fast stock cars of the roadster type now available from the principal makers. They will go a little more than half way back toward the 600-inch engines of long ago. Top displacement has been agreed upon as 366 inches in cylindrical content.

The superchargers, those marvelous little fans that revolve at 35,000 revolutions per minute and blow the explosive mixtures into the engines of the 91-inch racers, will not be allowed on the new jobs, at least in the four-cycle division. In the two-cycle class they will be permitted under certain conditions.

Roaring Exhausts.

With superchargers off and revolutions cut down to 5,400 a minute, the roaring exhaust that once thrilled the grandstands will be back again—welcome music to the dyed-in-the-wool motor car fan. This "freight train roar" is something the people have missed. The small cars with superchargers turning approximately 35,000 r.p.m., and the crankshaft speeds between 7,000 and 8,000 a minute, do not roar, but whine or hum at full speed.

Engineers and chief executives of factories are now considering and in some cases designing cars to try for the speed laurels in 1930. The contest board of the American Automobile Association has on its techfical committee for next year such representative engineers as Colonel William G. Wall, Indianapolis, past president of the Society of Automotive Engineers; S. G. Baits, chief engineer for Hudson; Carl Breer, executive engineer for Chrysler; Thomas J. Little, Jr., Marmon; D. G. Roos, chief engineer of the Studebaker Corporation; Colonel J. G. Vincent, Packard; H. C. Snow, Auburn, and Frank E. Watts, chief engineer of the Hupp Motor Car Corporation.

Naturally the question arises what they are going to do with the little cars to be discarded. This is answered by Mr. Edenburn in this way:

Tremendous Expense.

"The 46 little racers entered at Indianapolis this year represent an investment of half a million dollars. The total the ten cars first past the wire can hope to win, including major and minor prizes, is about $100,000.

"Racing and the building of racing cars have reached a point where the expense is tremendous. One break in a supercharger, for instance, will cost the owner of a racer at least $500, because new or replacement parts have to be made by hand, and especially for each type of engine.

"Bringing in the bigger cars will reduce the expense of construction somewhat and encourage factories to compete for what can be learned in an experimental way. While the small racers will be crowded off the Indianapolis speedway, at least for the 'American Grand Prix,' as the 500-mile event will be known from 1930 on, there will be plenty of demand from the dirt tracks for the little 91-inchers to show their speed, and that is where they will go.

"In addition to between 70 and 80 regular and relief drivers who go annually to Indianapolis, there are 500 pilots who follow the Class B and Class C circuits throughout the country. They will use the little cars."

Holland Distributes Kelly-Springfield Tires

Inset shows J. H. Holland, president of the Holland Tire Company, local distributors for the popular Kelly-Springfield automobile tires. Mr. Holland, a real pioneer in local automobile tire circles, has built up one of the largest clienteles of any distributor in Atlanta territory. The above photo was made of their home, located in the Ivy Street Garage building, where they are equipped to carry out every tire service requirement. Their fleet of trucks are at the disposal of motorists at all times.

Studebaker Record Cars Strictly Stock Models

How stock is a stock car? Are the stock car rules made by the American Automobile association enforced on passenger cars taking part in long distance record trials? Can mechanics so alter and adjust stock cars as to increase their speed?

These and other questions are raised and answered in a recent article in Motor Age, well-known automobile trade journal, to settle the doubts of skeptical motorists who find it hard to believe that strictly stock cars are capable of the feats which have brought to America such a large share of world speed and endurance honors.

"I realize that there are people who question the absolutely stock status of cars that perform as the Studebaker Presidents did in the recent 30,000-mile run," says A. H. Means, New York city zone supervisor for the contest board of the American Automobile association, under whose direction this and many other test runs were made.

The Studebaker 30,000-mile run was in many respects the most important automotive event ever held under A. A. A. jurisdiction, for the trial established 11 new world records and 23 international class B records. These marks were all certified by the International Association of Recognized Automobile Clubs in Paris, of which the A. A. A. is the United States member. Four stock President Eight cars made the run—two roadsters and two sedans. The leading roadster completed the 30,000 miles in 26,326 minutes, at an average speed of 68.3 miles per hour.

"Were it humanly possible more accurately, intelligently and minutely to check and examine these stock cars to establish them as such, no stone would be left unturned to do it," Mr. Means states in the Motor Age article.

According to the stock car rules of the A. A. A. contest board, a stock car is a manufacturer's model of a car that is in regular production, is regularly cataloged in the current catalogs of the manufacturer and is identical in technical details and in other respects with the required production of said model.

Local Tire Expert Gives Valuable Advice to Owners

Sam E. Levy, who distributes Hood White Arrow and Suprex tires in this city is an experienced driver. He has driven hundreds of thousands of miles over all kinds of roads and he knows just what roads mean to tires.

"The modern tire is up against all kinds of roads," says Mr. Levy. "I have driven over cement concrete roads, brick roads, wooden block roads, gravel and sand roads, cobble stone roads, and just plain ordinary dirt roads. A soft road is easy on tires but slow on mileage. If you want to pile up tire mileage you must drive according to the road you are on.

"There is nothing the matter with the modern, up-to-date tire. It can give you 15,000, 18,000, 20,000 miles of service—if it isn't abused.

Tire Mileage Depends Upon Driver.

"Except in the case of unusual accidents, it is not the fault of tire manufacturers that tires fail. It is usually due to inexperienced, or careless driving. A good tire can stand a lot of tearing, scraping and sliding, but it can't stand it forever. There are years of service in a good tire if you treat it good.

"Here are the rules to follow if you want tire mileage:

"Start slowly. Don't jam on the accelerator.

"Run at an even speed wherever possible and as long as possible.

"When braking, brake gradually. Raise the foot up and down on the brake a number of times rather than push it down suddenly.

"Drive slowly through ruts.

"Slow up for breaks or bumps in the road.

"Keep tires properly inflated.

"Keep tires in repair. Watch for minor cuts or bruises.

"Come to a slow stop. Never 'slide' tires when coming to a stop.

"Always buy good tires. The pay most in the long run."

Willys-Overland Sets New High April Record

Toledo, Ohio, May 18.—Willys-Overland achieved the greatest April sales record in its history with a total sale of 40,248 Whippets and Willys-Knights. This is a marked increase over the April, 1928, sales which, up to the present year, held the all-time April record.

A significant fact in the April business, which will have an influence in profits for the month, was the greatly increased sale of the company's higher priced models. Sale of the Willys-Knight "70-B" models and the Whippet Six line constituted 50 per cent of the total sales, the remaining 50 per cent covering the Whippet Four line. Compared with March of this year, April Whippet Six sales show an increase of 30 per cent while an increase of 11 per cent is shown in Willys-Knight sales.

A conservative analysis of Willys-Overland profits for the month indicate that April, 1929, will show an increase of 60 per cent over the same month of last year.

May orders indicate a continuance of the present big volume, with production in all lines at capacity to meet the sales demand.

Franklin First To Offer Sedan Models to Public

For the first 15 years of the automobile's development, touring cars and runabouts were the only types known. Strangely enough development of the closed body came slowly even after its obvious advantages had been demonstrated. The type of automobile body that today is on more than 95 per cent of all cars, required almost three years to demonstrate its general practicability.

H. H. Franklin, of Syracuse, N. Y., whose Franklin Automobile Company produced the first multi-cylindered air-cooled engine built in America, the first four-cylinder engine, the first six-cylinder engine, the first seven-bearing crankshaft and a host of other new ideas, was first to put the sedan body in production. Custom builders had been dabbling with the idea, but only Franklin saw the possibilities from a production point of view and in June, 1913, shipped the first models to dealers.

The body instantly became popular with Franklin owners and that company launched into an extensive program of sedan production. For more than two years it had the field almost to itself and more than 40 per cent of its total output was being given over to sedans before other manufacturers actively entered the field.

The reason was not lack of vision on the part of the rank and file of the industry, but lack of structural experience and design data. Franklin, who introduced the air-cooled engine, had from the first championed the theory of flexible construction which that type of engine permits. This flexibility coupled with an exclusive method of body suspension protected Franklin sedan bodies from strains and rattles, while paradoxically, the exponents of rigid construction found difficulty in bracing and mortising closed bodies so that road shocks coming up through rigid frames would not disintegrate them.

The problem involved a principle of mechanics which even today is little understood. Right now it is being tried out in the landing gear of Commander Byrd's airplanes in the Antarctic. Human belief is confounded by the apparent contradiction in the fact that a structure which is flexible is stronger and more durable than one which is rigid and static. Yet such is the case.

Byrd is proving it in airplanes landing and taking off across rough fields of ice. And people who know the staunchness and quietness of Franklin automobile bodies remark the same fact when they visit the Franklin plant and see there the flexibility that is provided in chassis and body members, without, however, distortion or binding in any part of the structure.

Chrysler Car Shipments Show Increase in April

The Chrysler Corporation reported a decided gain in shipments for April of this year of all Chrysler-built cars as compared with April of 1928. According to the official announcement of the corporation, Chrysler shipments during April of this year, both domestic, export and Canadian, of Plymouths, Chrysler "65s," "75s," Imperials, DeSotos, Fargo commercial trucks and cars, Dodge Brothers New Sixes, Seniors and Dodge trucks, buses and commercial cars, totaled 59,785 units, a gain of 26.5 per cent over the 47,155 units shipped during April of 1928 and a gain of 72 per cent over the shipment of 34,781 in April of 1927.

Total shipments of Chrysler and Dodge Brothers automotive products for the first four months of 1929 amounted to 182,521 units, a gain of 14.3 per cent over those for the same period of 1928, when 159,857 were shipped and an increase of 42.1 per cent over the 127,903 units shipped during the first four months of 1927.

A decided increase occurred in Plymouth shipments in April, 16,113 cars being shipped, as compared with 10,926 in March, a gain of 5,187 cars. Plymouth shipments, although the factory was on schedule with production, failed to meet orders by 4,000 cars, so popular has this car become.

On Tuesday, April 30, the new Plymouth car plant experienced its first 1,000-car production day. This impressive figure, reached in less than 10 months after the inception of the Plymouth car, established, according to company officials, a new production record, not only for the lowest priced Chrysler-built automobile, but for any car during the first year of its manufacture constituting a new record in the automobile industry.

Orders on hand as of May 3, for Plymouth cars, both for the domestic, Canadian and export markets amounted to 17,164, as compared with actual May shipments last year of the previous low-priced Chrysler car of 8,381, indicating an increase of 100 per cent.

De Soto also experienced a new high during April, making record shipments during the month of 8,885 cars against 8,532 in March.

AIR-WAY BRANCH HERE IN LARGER QUARTERS

Due to the volume of business, the Air-Way Branch of Atlanta, selling the Air-Way sanitary system, has taken on enlarged quarters and has a complete working plant that is an ideal model for such equipment. Manager Ralph P. Kinney announced that this expansion has been due to the broad and favorable acceptance of the Air-Way cleaner in the south.

The territory covered by the Air-Way has more than trebled and this city is headquarters for the entire southeast. A recent change in personnel is the appointment of Sam B. Talley as manager of the Charlotte divisional operation and of Ralph E. Nolan as sales manager.

The most nearly permanent tire!

The pistons are good for millions of strokes; the gears and the bearings for millions of revolutions. You know it or you wouldn't have bought the car. But the tires . . . the tires on even the best cars have been the one uncertain "temperamental" factor.

And now at last that's out . . . The point of a tack, if it didn't curl up would stop somewhere short of half way through the all-season tread of a LEE SUPER DE LUXE tire. Glass and sharp rocks might grow dull against this invincible tread.

Literally, the average owner doesn't keep a car as long as a set of these perfectly balanced tires will last. We mean it—the most nearly permanent tires ever known. They beat other "supers" even more than LEE of Conshohocken has always beaten other tires. # You are paying for them— But are you getting— Straight Eight advantages?

If you pay $1395 or more for an automobile, you are entitled to the finest and most advanced motoring advantages, possible only in a Straight Eight.

The advantages of a Straight Eight are not just "talking points."

They are instantly noticeable the minute you get out of any other type of car and start driving a Straight Eight.

Many people, who in other respects want and appreciate the best that life affords, have not yet graduated to Straight Eight automobiles. Either they have never driven a Straight Eight and do not know from experience how much smoother, finer and more restful Straight Eight motoring is. Or, they have been erroneously informed that a Six is more economical than a Straight Eight.

No one can tell you the driving difference between a Six and a Straight Eight. That is something you must experience. Once you have driven the Auburn Straight Eight you need no salesman to explain its advantages. They are so pronounced as to preclude argument.

As to economy—

Auburn not only has acquired leadership in developing more efficient, reliable, endurable Straight Eight motor cars, but also has conclusively demonstrated that the Straight Eight is as economical to operate and maintain as Six cylinder cars. In addition, the Auburn Straight Eight will bring a higher resale value, making it therefore, both in initial cost, and because of the greater enjoyment you get during its ownership, the finest motor car investment you can make.

You are invited to compare the Auburn Straight Eight with any other automobile anywhere near the price. Come and drive it. Go over it with microscopic care, then if the car does not sell itself, you will not be asked to buy.

We must urge you however, to anticipate the date you would like to have your new car and place your order now. Despite the fact that Auburn production has been more than doubled this year to date, the growing public demand for the greater value for less cost obtainable only in Auburn cars, has caused most Auburn dealers to be from two to four weeks behind in deliveries.

The Advantages of a Straight Eight when translated into Road Action include:

Greater efficiency
Quicker pick up
Faster acceleration
Greater reserve for hills and emergencies
Less gear shifting
Easier control
Safer handling
Less strain
Smoother performance
And a minimum of effort on driver's part

Willys-Overland Officers And Directors Re-Elected; Optimistic Report Is Made

1929 Sales Far Over 1928 Figures, With Prospects Pointing to Greater Future Gains.

Toledo, Ohio, May 18—(Special) At the annual meeting of the Willys-Overland Company, held here this week, all of the present officers and board of directors were re-elected.

In a statement to the stockholders, President John N. Willys said that every indication pointed to 1929 as one of the most successful years in the company's history, with sales surpassing the record volume of last year by a substantial margin and satisfactory prospects for greater earnings in the second quarter.

"The first quarter showed an increase in per share profits as compared with the same period of 1928," Mr. Willys said, "with the 1929 profits based on 3,000,000 common shares outstanding as against only 2,526,684 outstanding shares in the first quarter of last year. Since the bulk of our first quarter's profits this year were largely acquired in its closing weeks, our earning potential for the second quarter is materially enhanced with notable gains in sales.

Sixes Show Gains.

"An important factor which should have a marked effect in increased earnings in the current and following quarters is our sales gains in the higher priced six-cylinder lines of Willys-Knights and Whippets. Our six-cylinder models now comprise 50 per cent of our total volume, the balance being our lower priced four-cylinder Whippet model. Earlier in the year the ratio was approximately 75 per cent Whippet fours and 25 per cent Willys-Knights and Whippet sixes. Not only are we enjoying record gains in our domestic business this year, but our exports for the first quarter showed an increase of 72 per cent over the same period last year."

Mr. Willys also said that the distribution of stock as voted at the meeting today indicates there has been no material change in the past year in the ratio of any of the large personal holdings.

Spikes Rumors.

"I have been at the head of this company for 21 years," Mr. Willys said. "In other words, I have attained my majority. In that time there have been frequent rumors, some of which gained widespread notice, to the effect that the company was considering the advisability of becoming merged with other organizations, and at other times that my personal interests and holdings in the company were to pass into other hands, plus additional unfounded rumors of similar purport.

"Naturally, time cannot always be taken to issue specific denial for all such rumors, but I want to frankly say today that I have taken no steps to sell my stock or to change my relationship to the company in any way, and that I have no plans effecting the capital structure, the organization or the personnel of the company. This should set at rest all rumors, surmises and guesses that have been current during the past few weeks."

The company's reelected directorate is comprised of President John N. Willys; C. O. Miniger, George M. Jones, Gordon M. Mather, Rathbun Fuller, Thomas H. Tracy, H. C. Tillotson, L. A. Miller, C. B. Wilson, of Pontiac; C. B. Mertz, of New York, and T. A. Russell, of Toronto.

OUTING COMMITTEE HOLDS MEETING

The general committee on arrangements for the 1929 annual summer outing of the Atlanta Automobile Association, held an important meeting during the past week, for the purpose of outlining plans in general to make the outing a great success. T. P. Hicks, of the Autocar Sales & Service Co., is general chairman on arrangements. The outing will be held in July, at one of the near-by country clubs.

The outing will begin with an all-day golf tournament, under the direction of a special chairman. The golf tournament has always been one of the big features of the outing, attracting many teams from the members of the association, and this year's tournament is expected to equal or excel those of previous years.

It has been decided that the members of the association will close their places of business at noon, on the day of the outing, in order to give all their employes an opportunity to go out to the Country Club and spend the afternoon and evening. An interesting bridge party is being arranged for the afternoon, at the clubhouse, for ladies exclusively.

In addition to the golf tournament and bridge party there will be games and stunts on the grounds all afternoon for the children and grownups, in charge of a special chairman; swimming in the lake, tennis and other sports, and a splendid dinner will be served at 6:30, followed by an entertainment and dance, accompanied, of course, by one of Atlanta's leading orchestras.

Following the custom of previous years, a large number of prizes will be awarded to the winners of the golf tournament, bridge party and games and stunts.

There is every reason to believe that the attendance record of last year's outing, of nearly 1,500, will be reached or exceeded this year.

Harbin Praises Lee Super - Tire On Display Here

"During the two years that I have been serving the tire buying public of Atlanta and its vicinity," says M. J. Harbin, of the Harbin Tire & Battery Co., Inc., distributor for Lee of Conshohocken tires, "I have never been so thoroughly enthused about a tire to meet the modern needs of quick starting, fast stepping and sudden stopping cars, as I have in the new Lee Super De Luxe which I am now displaying in my store for the first time.

"I watched the development of this tire at the Conshohocken factory. I have seen it come in the last eight months from an idea to an accomplished fact. I have noticed particularly, too, the tests made of this tire with other super tires by the Lee of Conshohocken fleet of test cars, and I am convinced beyond peradventure that this tire that I am now offering to the discriminating motoring public of this city eclipses in safety, long life, easy riding qualities, and long wearng durability of the all-season non-skid tread, any tire that has ever been made."

Carrying further the determination to make each unit perfect, Lee of Conshohocken has designed an exceptionally heavy, sturdy tube for especial use with the new Super De Luxe casing. It has been built to last as long as the tire—a fact that assures the tire-buyer that a full set of Super De Luxe tires equipped with the Lee Special De Luxe tube means the end of tire troubles.

This new tire is now on display in the Harbin Tire & Battery Company store at Little Five Points.

Revelation Week Planned By Cadillac and LaSalle From May 20 Through May 27

Event Designed To Acquaint Public With New Features of These Two Cars.

The many new safety and performance features in Cadillac and LaSalle cars have proved such a revelation to Cadillac and LaSalle owners throughout America that the Cadillac Motor Car Company and its dealers have set aside the week of May 20 to 27 as a special week during which unusual opportunities will be afforded the public to get better acquainted with Cadillac and LaSalle cars and learn at first hand of their new features.

Lynn McNaughton, Cadillac vice president, says: "Cadillac has contributed so much to automotive progress in recent months that it is impossible, except to those having personal knowledge of Cadillac and LaSalle cars, to keep abreast of the achievements that have been made. Therefore, we take this opportunity to invite the public to ascertain for itself what the combination of Cadillac and General Motors has meant in fine car design, manufacture and operation.

"To the all-around assured perfection of performance of Cadillac and LaSalle cars have been added certain engineering developments which appeal to all motorists, but have particular appeal for women.

"One of the most important of these is the new syncro-mesh, silent-shift transmission. This is a Cadillac development that makes gear shifting almost an unconscious act. There is no obvious effort, no sound. The operation is equally as smooth and silent at any speed.

"Owners have also brought home to us the realization that the duplex-mechanical, four-wheel brakes are a revolutionary contribution, both from the standpoint of easy mastery and greater safety. Although they are very positive and powerful, they are velvety in their action and require amazingly little effort. This means absolute car control under all conditions.

"A third great development is crystal-clear, non-shatterable security-plate glass. It is a glass that remains intact in the event of collision or if struck by stones thrown up by passing cars. All Cadillac, LaSalle and Fleetwood windows, doors and windshields are equipped with it. The owner may forever dismiss all fear of flying glass fragments from any cause.

"To these innovations has been added a steering gear so designed that it removes all shock, strain and vibration from steering. This results in the same easy handling either in city traffic or on the open road. Adjustable front seats assure comfort to all drivers."

Lower Priced Franklin Attracts Many Buyers

The Franklin Automobile Company's new Model 130 is realizing the demand that was predicted for it when its lower price was first announced, shipping reports of that company for the first quarter of 1929 make clear.

Breaking all other quarterly reports in Franklin history and putting the 1929 first quarter 255 cars ahead of the first half of 1928, the shipment records show that fully one-half of the cars leaving the Franklin factory were Model 130.

By bringing the advantages of the air-cooled motor and the quality of precision manufacture into a lower price range, the Franklin company has made a strategic move which places it in especially strong position. Its market potential formerly confined to sales in the class $2,500 and above, now has been expanded to reach into the great field of buyers immediately below the $2,000 mark.

Inducements other than price, air-cooling-efficiency and quality are offered. The Model 130 sedan is a large car, showing an increase in wheelbase over last year's standard Franklin models, and affording leg-room and head-room of most generous proportion. Space economies in length of motor effected by air-cooling have been used for further passenger convenience, while the 58-inch tread gives a seat width unusual even in care of the quality class.

As an example of the many refinements in seating arrangement and convenience which can be achieved through careful study of the problem, the new Franklin is doubtless an indication of interior designing trends which may be expected on all cars in the near future.

MRS. THOMAS OFFERS SECRETARIAL SERVICE

Miss Cora I. Thomas, formerly connected in an executive capacity with a large corporation of this city, has been operating for some time the Royal Employment Agency at 353-357 Peachtree Arcade building. She recently leased four additional offices for the purpose of renting desk space which carries with it a complete secretarial, telephone and mailing service.

She stated Saturday that at all times she will have in her employ a competent stenographer and an assistant to serve the people in the Peachtree Arcade, as well as the general public.

Frederick Hanna Appointed Durant District Manager

Frederick Hanna, since early this year a special representative of Durant Motors, Inc., has been appointed Durant district manager at Cincinnati, Ohio. Mr. Hanna was for nearly five years in the field service of Dodge Brothers, having been district representative in Indianapolis and in New York.

From 1905, when he graduated from West Point, until 1919 Mr. Hanna served in the regular army. In 1918 and 1919 he was instructor in heavy artillery at West Point and he is credited with establishing the first motor transport training courses for cadets. He has received citations from the secretary of war, the adjutant general of the army and from General Leonard Wood for conspicuous service, both in this country and with the American Expeditionary Forces and is now on the retired list with the rank of major.

Long acquaintance with the executives who are now in charge of the affairs of Durant Motors, dating back to pre-war days, and confidence in the successs of dealers who merchandise the product they build and indorse, Mr. Hanna says, make him particularly happy to be back with his old associates.

De Soto Body Styles Fulfill Owners' Need

That is what automobile manufacturers have been trying to accomplish since the pioneer days of the industry, according to Karl H. Bronson, director of advertising for the De Soto division of Chrysler Motors, in a recent interview at Detroit.

"In designing De Soto Six bodies," Mr. Bronson said, "Chrysler engineers' predominating idea was to give greater luxury and more comfort than was ever before found in the field of moderate-priced 6-cylinder cars. That is the principal reason for the universal popularity of De Soto body styles. It explains, too, the great increase in production to keep pace with demands of dealers for new cars from our plant.

"The interiors reflect the studied care taken to provide for the comfort and pleasure of those who demand not only beauty of design but also easy riding qualities and luxurious appointments as necessities in their personal automobile. This roominess and comfort are the keynotes of every interior in each De Soto model. Seats with saddle spring cushions have been scientifically planned to conform to the most restful and healthful sitting postures. There is surplus of head-room and leg-room in front and rear. The soft shading of the upholstery satisfies the eye of the most discriminating and critical.

"In the closed bodies, the upholstery is of genuine, rich mohair, while tan pigskin grain leather has been chosen for the open styles and business coupe. Doors are wide and staunchly constructed, drafts and squeaks being eliminated by large rubber windlaces and strips to insure an exceptionally close fit to the body."

With D. C. Black

AUSTIN ABBOTT.

Announcement was made the past week by D. C. Black of the appointment of Austin Abbott to his retail sales staff. Mr. Abbott needs no introduction to the Atlanta motoring public, having been a familiar figure on Atlanta's famous Automobile Row for the past fifteen years. He goes to the D. C. Black agency with several years' experience as Buick salesman, and is well qualified to fill the requirements of the Black organization.

Motorists Quick To Respond To Improvements

Motorists are quick to respond to mechanical improvements employed by automobile manufacturers in their products which provide added conveniences, safety and comfort. This response is seen in the wide public acceptance of the new Superior Whippet fours and sixes which bring to the low priced field, in addition to outstanding beauty and design, mechanical improvements which set a new high standard of perfection in this price classification.

Notable among the features on these new Willys-Overland products is the "Finger-Tip Control," which is admitted to be the greatest single driving convenience since the self starter.

The "Finger-Tip-Control" mechanism consists of a button in the center of the steering wheel, this making it possible for the driver to start the motor, operate the lights and sound the horn without changing the driving position.

With the introduction of these cars the public immediately disclosed unusual interest in the "Finger-Tip-Control," so markedly was it a new convenience in driving. Then followed the demand for the cars which has resulted in a popularity for these models never rivaled before in the company's history.

This same interest is also disclosed by Willys-Knight buyers, the new Knight engined six of the Toledo manufacturer also being equipped with the "Finger-Tip-Control."

Owners of the new Whippet fours and sixes and the new Willys-Knight sixes declare that the safety factor of being able to operate the lights in night driving without changing position is equally as important as being able to start the engine without having to fumble and search for a starter button in the toe-board.

McDarby Made Director For Auburn Co.

Auburn, Ind., May 18.—Announcement of the appointment of N. E. McDarby to the position of director of sales for the Auburn Automobile company has been made by Roy H. Faulkner, vice president.

At the same time, Faulkner announced that the position of sales manager for the Auburn division of the company would be filled by Harry L. Brinck, formerly supervisor of district salesmanagers.

Position of director of sales has been newly created in the Auburn company and was necessitated by the greatly increased Auburn sales this year and the broadening of the company's activities.

McDarby has been with the company five years and in that time has assisted in developing sales from less than 3,000 in 1924 to nearly 12,000 in the first five months of 1929. He is an experienced automobile man and has spent nearly 15 years in merchandising cars.

Brinck joined the Auburn organization late in 1928, having formerly been connected with Velie, Studebaker and Peerless.

Both men are in their thirties and of the vigorous type, fitting well into Auburn's aggressive organization of which E. L. Cord, president, is the youngest chief executive in the automobile industry.

22% MORE POWER

5 MILES AN HOUR MORE SPEED

UNTIL you have driven the new Nash "400" with the Twin Ignition motor, you can have no adequate idea of how much pleasure it has added to motoring.

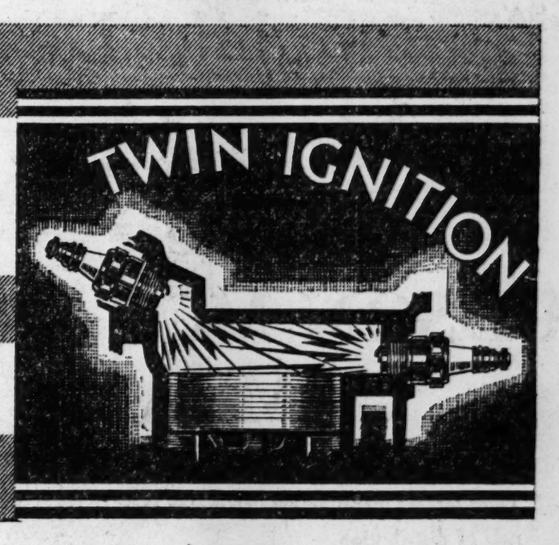

Here are some plain, unvarnished facts and figures which may serve to convince you that you owe yourself a ride in a Twin-Ignition-Motored Nash.

With Twin Ignition instead of single ignition (two spark plugs per cylinder firing simultaneously, instead of one) higher compression is practical, and a much more efficient combustion of the gases is accomplished.

The result is that the identical Nash motor, by actual test, produces 22% more power than with single ignition, 5 miles per hour more speed, and gives you 2 extra miles of travel from every single gallon of gasoline you buy.

In fairness to yourself, don't think of buying any car today, until you have seen and driven the brilliant new Twin-Ignition-Motored Nash "400."

The first battalion of the United States naval reserve of the sixth naval district is preparing for its coming annual cruise. The battalion will leave Atlanta on the night of July 5 for Charleston, from which port it will sail the next morning on board two destroyers, the U. S. S. Sharkey and the U. S. S. Sturtevant. These two destroyers will shortly thereafter join the naval reserve units from Jacksonville and Miami en route north and will proceed to the naval rendezvous near Newport, R. I., where joint maneuvers with the scouting fleet will take place.

At the end of the first week the four destroyers will proceed to Rockland, Maine, for several days of shore leave afterwards returning to the naval rendezvous for the following week's practice. During the second week various maneuvers will be participated in, including annual gunnery competition between the various reserve divisions on their respective destroyers. One of the gun crews from the Atlanta battalion, carried off second honors in the competition last year, being nosed out for first place by the naval reserve unit from Hartford, Conn.

Chevrolet With 11 Passengers Outruns Tornado

After things quieted down a bit in the storm ridden section of south Georgia many curious as well as heroic feats were brought to public attention. The one referred to here is most unusual in that the hero happened to be a motor car. When the storm first started J. M. Crumpton piled his own and his nephew's family, consisting of 11 persons, into his small Chevrolet sedan. By the time the last one had crawled in the storm was raging and Mr. Crumpton pushed his accelerator, urging this motor to go faster, faster and faster and after traveling some 20 miles he had actually outrun a tornado that left destruction in its path. All 11 of these people give this Chevrolet car credit for saving their lives.

WALTER P. CHRYSLER'S TRAFFIC TALKS

UNIFORM TRAFFIC REGULATIONS.

Uniform traffic regulation is recognized as the solution of many traffic problems. The code drawn up by the National Conference on Street and Highway Safety has been adopted and enacted into laws, at least in part, by many states. Virginia was the first state in 1926 to enact into law the first motor laws following the recommendations of the council.

Fifteen states have adopted rules based on the uniform code.

States acting in 1927 were Pennsylvania, North Carolina, North Dakota, Idaho, Michigan, Minnesota, Arkansas, Arizona, Washington, New Hampshire, California and Oregon.

Legislation in 44 states where the adoption of parts of the code are being considered is expected in 1929.

While the model municipal traffic ordinance has been out only a few months, several cities have already adopted it. In many others action for its adoption is pending, chief among these being Boston and New Orleans. Los Angeles, San Francisco and Chicago already have ordinances closely paralleling the model ordinance.

The National Conference on Street and Highway Safety is prosecuting a nation-wide campaign for uniform laws. This body was organized in 1924 with Herbert Hoover as chairman. After several years of study the conference proposed in March, 1928, a uniform vehicle code as well as a model code for cities.

Most of the states are using this uniform state code as a basis for enactment of new legislation.

Woman To Seek Endurance Record Near New York

Roosevelt Field, N. Y., May 18.—(AP)—A woman will command one of two planes which were being fitted out today to challenge the world's refueling flight record held by the army plane Question Mark.

Announcement of the plans of Miss Viola Gentry, former holder of the women's endurance record, to attempt to better the record of 150 hours, 40 minutes and 15 seconds established by the crew of the Question Mark at Los Angeles last January was made simultaneously with a similar announcement on the part of a crew headed by Lieutenant H. B. Clarke, former manager of Roosevelt field.

Lieutenant Clarke said he planned to take off in a monoplane Monday in an effort to stay aloft 200 hours. He said Martin Jensen, holder of the world's solo flight record, and a young German pilot, William Ulbrich, would accompany him. The plane is called the Three Musketters.

Their plane will be refueled by means of a device which will enable them to pick up cans of gasoline from the ground.

Miss Gentry said she would take off Tuesday morning. Her plane has been christened the Answer. Walter J. Carr, designer of the plane, will accompany her.

Refueling of the Answer will be from another plane flying under it. A special pumping device has been installed in the Answer to permit lifting gasoline from the refueling plane.

The Question Mark was refueled from a plane which flew above it and from which gasoline was fed into the tanks of the Question Mark by gravity.

CANTONESE DROP TONS OF BOMBS ON HEADQUARTERS

Canton, China, May 18.—(AP)—Cantonese aviators returned today from Wuchow, on the Kwangsi border, where they bombed the Kwangsi wireless station and Kwangsi military headquarters. They dropped three 100-pound bombs on the wireless station and five bombs on the military headquarters, inflicting heavy damages.

The British gunboat Moorhan arrived here from Samshui with some English women who had evacuated their homes there. They were en route to Canton when their vessel ran aground in the Sikiang river, 15 miles west of Canton.

Fighting at Samshui apparently was more strenuous today as artillery fire was audible in Canton.

Hudson, Essex Export Shipments Reach High Mark

Hudson Motor Company officials state that for the first four months of 1929, export shipments have reached a new high record, keeping a parallel pace with domestic business. J. S. Draper, general export manager, says that 27,071 Hudson and Essex cars were shipped in this period by the foreign and Canadian divisions of the export division—a gain of 28 per cent over the 21,214 cars shipped in the same period of 1928, which had been a record-breaking period up to that time.

Estimates of export business for the year are now fixed at more than 70,000 Hudson and Essex cars, conservatively figured, and could run to the 75,000 mark without causing surprise to the Hudson management, it is said.

Hudson operates in the foreign field both with its own plants and through distributors. The plant of Hudson's British subsidiary at London is now producing a seasonal peak of 1,000 cars a month, and is maintaining Essex's position as the largest selling American car in the United Kingdom. The Berlin assembly plant, serving only Germany, has just completed its 6,000th in less than two years' operations. It was originally planned to build only 1,200 cars a year, but first year's production was production was nearly 3,200.

All Europe except England and Germany is to be served from a new plant in Brussels, Belgium, which has a capacity of 15,000 cars a year.

Hudson and Essex cars are assembled in Australia, New Zealand and Tasmania by long-established distributors in their own plants; also in Japan and in Buenos Aires, Bahia Blanco and Sao Paulo in the South American markets.

Hudson officials declare that the strong competitive position of Hudson and Essex cars in the 1929 season is being felt in every part of the world. To date the export department has been obliged to cancel not less than 3,000 car orders because of its inability to obtain sufficient automobiles.

Marmon Builds Ten Thousandth Roosevelt Car

Indianapolis, Ind., May 18.—Roosevelt car number 10,000 was shipped from the Marmon factory Wednesday of this week, exactly the same day A. G. M. Williams observed his fifth anniversary as president of the Marmon Motor Car Company. This was the feature of one of the largest weeks of the spring season in point of total production and shipments of Marmon and Roosevelt cars.

The ten thousandth Roosevelt was shipped to the Marmon retail branch in Detroit. It was a five-passenger sedan. The Marmon factory is being operated on capacity schedule in line with a record influx of Marmon and Roosevelt orders from all parts of the country.

Production is holding at better than 250 cars a day and it is expected that May will equal or exceed the record-breaking total established in April, which was the best month in the history of the company.

A Thousand - Plymouth Surprise

Faced with an ever-increasing surplus of orders over production, A. vanDerZee, general sales manager of the Plymouth Motor Corporation, has been "riding" the Plymouth factory officials for more cars While the force of trained workers and production has been increased steadily since operations were begun at the mammoth new Plymouth plant in January, it was not expected that the thousand-a-day clip would be reached until the middle of May.

However, P. C. Sauerbrey, Plymouth operating manager, came through with a welcome surprise by hitting the thousand mark on April 30, when 1002 Plymouths were produced. Mr. vanDerZee (center) is seen above congratulating Mr. Sauerbrey on his feat as the thousandth Plymouth for the day rolls off the production line. K. G. Pound, Plymouth director of distribution, looks on approvingly.

This record, in the fourth month of operation at the new Plymouth plant, and the tenth month since the Plymouth was introduced to the public, constitutes a record not only for the lowest-priced Chrysler-built car, but for the entire industry since the first automobile was built.

Nine-Year Fight Against Volstead Act Causes Suit

Chicago, May 18.—(AP)—Charley Zack's one-man crusade against the Volstead act finally has exhausted the patience of Mrs. Zack, who has asked for a divorce.

She said Zack was abstemious when they were married in 1920, a few days before the prohibition act became effective. With the law in force, however Zack promptly announced himself as exceedingly peeved. He informed his wife, her bill declares, that he "knew his rights and that nobody could tell him what he could drink."

"I am going to drink steadily," the then abstemious Zack was reported by his wife as saying, "until this prohibition law is abolished."

Mrs. Zack goes on to state that she put up with Zack's battle against the Volstead law for nine years, but finally came to the conclusion that the law probably would remain on the books no matter how much Zack consumed, which was plenty.

THREE DIE ON SHIP

British Steamer Reports Deaths While at Sea.

Marseilles, France, May 18.—(AP)—The British steamer Assyria arriving here today from India reported that three aboard it had died en route, supposedly from smallpox. Sanitary officials invoked a strict quarantine, examining all passengers and insisting on their vaccinaton. Those refusing to be vaccinated had the fact registered in their passports.

BOGLE APPOINTED DIXIE MANAGER OF WHIZ PRODUCTS

Appointment of Charles K. Bogle as southeastern division manager for the R. M. Hollingshead Company, manufacturer of Whiz products, has been announced by the home office in Camden, N. J., and Mr. Bogle has entered into his new duties. In 1928, prior to which time he had been sales manager for the Stewart-Warner

CHARLES K. BOGLE.

Sales Company in Atlanta, Mr. Bogle accepted the position of sales manager for the Hollingshead Company. His efficient handling of the company's affairs in this position won for him rapid promotion and he was soon made branch manager, at which time the company was distributing its products to the dealer.

At the head of the southeastern division, Mr. Bogle will have charge of affairs of the Hollingshead Company throughout Georgia, North and South Carolina, Tennessee and Florida. He is a native of Georgia and is well known to the automobile trade in the entire southeast, having for 12 years been identified with this industry.

The R. M. Hollingshead Company was established 36 years ago when Mr. Hollingshead, Sr., founder and still active president of the business, began making harness soap, oil and axle grease in a small way. The business grew steadily until it has become a national concern, specializing in oil, grease and other automobile chemicals, comprising 98 quality products. The company is now the largest in the world in its line of business.

On April 1 Mr. Hollingshead organized the distribution policy of Whiz products, and instead of selling direct to dealers, they are now being distributed entirely through the jobbing trade.

The southeastern division office is located at 614-15 Rhodes building.

Studebaker Rumble Seat Improved

The double hatch opening to the rumble seat oof Studebaker roadster models is a feature readily appreciated because of the easier entrance and exit it affords. The seat back folds up one way and a section of the rear deck folds up independently in the opposite direction. A single hatch necessitates either a small opening or a high awkward appearing seat back. The forward section of the Studebaker rumble hatch also affords protection for the legs when it is lowered.

TODAY'S Commander Straight Eight has swept to a popularity which eclipses even that of its illustrious predecessor, the gallant Commander which electrified all motordom by speeding 25,000 miles in 22,968 minutes.

Studebaker, Builder of Champions, holder of every official speed and endurance record for fully equipped stock cars, now sells more 8-cylinder cars than any other manufacturer on earth.

The first Studebaker straight eight was introduced at last year's motor shows. Its champion performance started the nation's swing to Studebaker. Smart, youthful style added still greater impetus. But it is value—Studebaker's famous One-Profit value—which is the real reason for Studebaker supremacy.

The Commander Eight blends flashing style and supple, eager power with comfort unknown until Studebaker introduced ball bearing spring suspension. Hydraulic shock absorbers further enhance its matchless travel ease. Double-drop frame, lower, costlier, but steadier and safer, permit low-swung and swifter appearance. Easier, more powerful brakes; safe, steel-core steering wheel; non-shattering windshield—these evidences of Commander quality make its One-Profit price quite as remarkable as its performance.

And Commander performance is something you can never forget, once you enjoy it for an hour. May we place a Commander at your disposal?

Modern Used Car Is Better Mechanically Than in Past, Veteran Merchandiser Says

Stodghill Says Used Cars Present Highest Values in Transportation Available.

In addition to ruling at a lower price today than ever before, the used car offered by the dependable Atlanta dealer is a far better automobile than at any time in the past.

That was the statement Saturday of B. V. Stodghill, general manager of the John Smith company, veteran Atlanta Automobile company at 530-540 West Peachtree street. Mr. Stodghill speaks authoritatively, for he has been associated with John Smith since 1906, when he was 18 years old and when the automobile dealer's chief problem was to trade in carriages and horses for the "new-fangled gas buggies" just making their appearance.

"There was a time when a dealer could wash a used car and sell it just as it was," Mr. Stodghill said, "but that day has passed. The buying public has become motor wise; new car prices have declined tremendously, and to merchandise used car successfully today, it is necessary to put them in first class mechanical condition and give them an honest guarantee of service.

"One-year-old used cars can be bought in the local market today at 60 per cent of their original cost, and my opinion is that not as much as 25 per cent of dependable service in them has been exhausted. This, of course, means that used cars present the very highest possible values so far as transportation is concerned; and, in addition, they have the advantage of being backed up solidly by the dealer who sells them."

Describing his own plan of used car selling, Mr. Stodghill said that the prospective purchaser of a used car is given the car and is allowed to drive it and use it as he pleases for three days prior to the actual purchase.

"At the end of that time he can do any one of three things," Mr. Stodghill explained. "He can retain the car and we will make any repairs that are needed; he can apply his payment to any other used car in stock, or he can apply it to the purchase of a new car. In this way his best interests are thoroughly safeguarded and he is assured of perfect satisfaction."

Mr. Stodghill said that his used car stock is extensive, with a model and a car to suit every purse and need. He invited inspection by the public at any and all times.

ERIE PRESIDENT TO TAKE CHARGE OF C. AND O., REPORT

Bernet, president of the Erie railroad, will shortly become president of the Chesapeake & Ohio railway, succeeding W. J. The paper says that the report has become widespread in financial circles and has been accepted there as the latest move of C. P. and M. J. Van Sweringen to develop their great railroad system. Directors of the Chesapeake & Ohio railway, it was said, will meet in Cleveland May 28 for election of officers.

Brilliant 'Pageant of Nations' To Be Presented Wednesday

"Atlanta can provide feminine beauty of every type, from the brunets of Arabia to the blonds of the far northern Europe, not to mention a few Asiatic types," declared Enrico Leide, orchestra conductor and composer, Saturday afternoon. "I am myself an Italian, and I thought I knew something of Atlanta's citizens of foreign birth, but I am surprised to learn how many nations are represented among your people."

Mr. Leide has just completed a rehearsal of the cast of the "Pageant of Nations," to be presented Wednesday night at 8 o'clock at the Atlanta Woman's Club auditorium, under the direction of the Cosmopolitan Civic Club. This is an organization of women of foreign birth and designed to bring them into closer relations for the study of citizenship and American history and customs.

WOOD FIBER USES EXPLAINED BY STATE

Cellulose industries and opportunities for Georgia capital are treated in a bulletin just issued by the Georgia Forest service and prepared by B. M. Lufborrow, state forester, and W. W. Ashe.

Rapid new development of cellulose or wood and vegetable fiber, resulting in a great variety of products is discussed in the bulletin. Rayon, or artificial silk, flexible glass or cellophane, celluloid, artificial amber, artificial tortoise shell, pearls and ivory, photographic films, paints, laquers, enamels, gun-cotton, smokeless powder, indurated ware, vulcanized fiber, paper of all kinds and wood alcohol, are a few of the cellulose or wood products discussed.

Spruce Tree Silk.

Rayon is spoken of as the silk of the spruce tree, already outranking silk and linen in commerce. How the wood fiber is converted into a jelly and forced through metal beads with tiny openings to make thread is described. The use of this material to make imitation horsehair for upholstery and artificial wool, for a filler in connection with dyeing, printing and finish applied to textile fabrics, as a sizing for plaid papers, filler for cloth book covers and covering for waterproof and washable window shades is discussed.

The large use of wood pulp or cellulos in the manufacture of paper is also described. The bulletin states that 45 per cent of pine wood is cellulose and this species of three holds great promise for development of cellulose industries in the south. Already it is being used for making paper.

Cotton Discussed.

Cotton is mentioned as a pure natural cellulose. Linters and other inferior grades of cotton are already in great demand by the cellulose industries. Cotton stalks and corn stalks could be used if gathered cheaply. Various hardwoods abounding in the south are desirable sources of cellulose and trees not suitable for lumber are useful in cellulose production.

In increase in cultivated land is characterized as uneconomic at this time, when the sounder policy is to grow more on fewer acres.

"Wood land now offers an opportunity for developing an enormous amount of increased capital at very slight outlay," according to the bulletin, which continued: "It requires raising no large sums of money for purchase or investment. It demands no increase in labor costs such as is required for handling an increase in farm area. A local or nearby market awaits the product."

MINISTER'S WIFE CHARGES 'CUNNING' IN DIVORCE SUIT

Los Angeles, May 18.—(AP)—Charging that "cunning and treachery" were used by her husband, Clifford Hendricks, Los Angeles and New York minister, in the suit which last fall resulted in an interlocutory divorce decree, Mrs. Ida May Hendricks today had a petition on file in superior court asking that the decree be set aside.

In her petition Mrs. Hendricks said her husband had threatened to have her daughter taken away from her and that she had been "embarrassed" into seeking a divorce.

TYPING CHAMPION OF STATE RECEIVES FREE CONTEST TRIP

Oscar Felsenstein, lightning-fingered freshman of the Georgia School of Technology, who won the school novice typewriting championship of the state at Savannah April 20, today received and accepted an invitation to go as a guest of the Underwood Typewriting Company, when he journeys to Toronto, Canada, next September to compete as the Georgia entrant in the international typewriting contest.

Georgia's was one of the first of 48 sectional typing matches to choose state champions for the world's school contest at the international sweepstakes. Felsenstein's winning speed was 51 errorless words a minute for a quarter of an hour.

In conformity with its practice of asking all state champions using Underwood machines to go to the international typeing classic at its expense, the Underwood Company, through W. D. M. Simmons, manager of the school department, formally extended to Felsenstein such an invitation. His trip will include a brief stay at Niagara Falls.

A special gold medal has been warded by the company to Miss Elia Kelley, of the Fulton High school of Atlanta, for her good record made in winning the Georgia state senior high school typewriting championship on an Underwood.

FLORIDA GAS TAX PLAN IS PROPOSED

Tallahassee, Fla., May 18.—(AP)—Another plan for distribution of the 5 cent gasoline tax was proposed today in a senate bill introduced by Senators Howell, Panama City, and Council, Carrabelle.

The measure would allot 2 cents to the state road department, one-half cent to the counties for lateral roads, and 1 cent to the counties as at present for the support of education.

The remaining one and a half cents would be divided among the counties for payment of bonded indebtedness. If there is no such indebtedness or if there is a surplus, the funds would be turned over to the state road department for construction and maintenance of highways in those counties from which the surplus came.

Only one other general bill was received by the senate. It would validate charters and letters patent of corporations with regard to transactions pursuant to trust powers exercised by corporations. Senator Anderson, Greensboro, sponsored the bill.

Among local measures introduced and passed was a bill by Senator Whitaker, Tampa, to establish a new form of government for the city of Tampa.

The senate session was occupied chiefly with disposal of legislation on the local calendar. Several general measures, taken up with unanimous consent, were also passed.

The latter included a house bill to validate all conveyances of land made by the commissioners of any county in the state.

Another bill passed would prescribe certain conditions under which widows with families dependent on them, or persons disabled by war or other misfortune might be exempt from taxation.

The deal for the Seelbach, Eppley asserted, was completed in 30 minutes, while he stopped off in Louisville en route to the west. He is here attending the Washington State Hotel Association convention.

Disassembled Car To Deliver It

It became necessary a few weeks ago, for the first time in the history of Chevrolet Motor company, to dismantle a car after sale in order to deliver it to its purchaser. This interesting incident occurred in Acheen, northern Sumatra, an outpost typical of numerous forsaken corners which Chevrolet has been pioneering for years.

One of the last provinces of the Dutch East Indies to submit to Dutch rule, Acheen has never been totally free from recurring outbursts of trouble. As a result, progress has lagged. Because it is rich in oil and endowed with fertile soil, steps have been taken by the government to penetrate it with roads.

Not long ago the Chevrolet dealer at Langsa received an order from the department of public works for a Chevrolet truck to be delivered to a point where the authorities were busy with a road which is to run from Sigli on the north coast of Sumatra to Meulaboh on the west coast, a distance of about 220 miles. From Meulaboh a road already existed up to a point about 50 miles inland. It was from here that the road was to be cut through the jungle to link up with a similarly short road running inland from Sigli.

Ships do not call at Meulaboh so that it was impossible to transport the Chevrolet truck by this means. There was only one solution—the truck had to be dismantled and carried overland by coolies to the scene of operation. The work of dismantling was carried out by the dealer and the weary task of transporting the parts was started.

Without doubt it was the strangest caravan ever to move across this section of jungle land. A coolie, lugging a wheel, marched a little in advance. The cylinder block was in the custody of a particularly husky pair. And so on. The heavier parts were carried in shifts to divide the work equally.

The route led through almost impenetrable jungle, along narrow mountain paths and over ravines and rivers. On one occasion in the trek, a stream, spanned only by a cable line, blocked the route. Nothing daunted, the expedition chiefs dispatched the coolies with the parts for which they were responsible across the stream "on the wire."

Nearly a month was required to complete the jaunt. The day the last of the parts arrived the truck was assembled by the dealer's mechanic. The next day it was doing Trojan duty as Chevrolet trucks have done many times before in pioneering enterprises.

New and Luxurious Models Of Yellow Cabs To Be Shown At Taxi Men's June Meeting

Snappy New Cars Answer to Rumor That General Motors Plans To Quit Field.

Pontiac, Mich., May 18.—Preshowings early in June of new Yellow Cab models with refinements that set an entirely new trend in taxicab design are announced by P. H. Geyser, vice president in charge of the cab division of General Motors Truck Company.

This announcement, says Mr. Geyser, is his company's answer to rumors that the manufacture of Yellow Cabs would be discontinued by the firm that has been a dominant figure in the industry for 20 years.

"We pioneered the manufacture and use of vehicles specially designed for taxicab service and we are in this business to stay," continued Mr. Geyser.

"Leading taxicab operators have always looked to us to build vehicles for them that withstand the terrific daily grind of cab service and that enable them to serve the public most efficiently while paying a satisfactory profit to the operator.

"These new models will add to the long-proved sturdiness and earning ability of Yellow Cabs a degree of beauty and luxurious comfort as I have never before seen in any taxicab. We will have a sedan and a 'town-car' model—each of which goes far beyond anything ever offered to the taxicab operators and to the taxi-riding public of America."

"Our first formal public showing will be made during the meeting of the National Association of Taxicab Operators in Chicago, June 26-28," Mr. Geyser stated.

"These new models, together with the fact that we have just completed our first year in the largest and most modern plant in the world devoted exclusively to the manufacture of Yellow Cabs, General Motors trucks, and Yellow coaches, should make it very obvious that we are planning to extend our sales and leadership, rather than to abandon the taxi-cab field."

U.S. and French Crews In Race On Atlantic Hop

New York, May 18.—(AP)—A race between a French and an American crew for the honor of being the first this year to cross the Atlantic by air appeared today to be in prospect for next week.

Roger O. Williams planned to take off Sunday from Teterboro airport, Hasbrouck Heights, N. J., on the first leg of a flight to Rome, while Armene Lotti said his French plane was virtually ready for its projected flight to Paris.

Williams will make his attempt in the monoplane Green Flash, used by Martin Jensen to establish a solo endurance record early this year. He will be accompanied by Lewis Yancey, author of several text books on air navigation.

The airmen said they hoped to start across the ocean next Tuesday and reach Rome in 50 hours. The plane has a single motor and will carry 500 gallons of gasoline.

The French plane, also a single motored, will carry 1,005 gallons of gasoline for its flight to Paris. With its crew of three and equipment it will weigh six and one-quarter tons. Jean Assollant will be pilot, Rene Lefevre, navigator, and the third member will be Lotti, backer of the flight.

The plane has been undergoing grooming at Roosevelt field for several days. If weather conditions are favorable he hoped to start the trans-Atlantic flight early next week.

Carol Wanted.

Bucharest, Rumania, May 18.—(AP) Senator Cornescu, who at a meeting at Talgoviste, Monday, declared all Rumania yearned for Prince Carol's return, has been expelled from the senate and the peasants' party and his parliamentary privileges abrogated. He will be arraigned and charged with treason.

Book Reviews in Tabloid

Dark Hester. By Anne Douglas Sedgwick. The author of "The Little French Girl" has written another story—this time it is a clash between two generations—each represented by a woman and each represents the best qualities that can be found in her generation—mother-in-law and daughter-in-law—Mrs. Monica Wilmott and Hester.

Hester is cool and calm as she views "this changing world," Mrs. Wilmott is earnest and emphatic in her denouncement of the passing of the old morals and the adoption of the new—Hester takes things as they come and reconciles herself to the fact that the world is not standing still, the older woman sees tragedy written everywhere.

It is simply the everlasting viewpoint of two generations—one begins to take a peep at the past now and then and the other sees the future and the changes that it brings. It would not be amiss or unreal, for it happens every day, that after all, it is simply a man's mother and a man's wife disagreeing over their son and husband in which they are both interested, and whose jealousy of each other is the usual result when a man does not marry his mother's selection, and in this case Clive Wilmott married the girl he loved. Knowing this Hester was indifferent to her mother-in-law and did not treat her with the deference which she would have otherwise have done.

Just at this time with their lives filled with indifference and perhaps something stronger, fate or destiny steps in and through the illness of Clive Wilmott, their hero, averts a tragedy which was shipwrecking three lives. There is plenty of realism in the story, which is so cleverly handled by the author and there will be plenty of sympathy expressed for both generations of women, but in such cases a little sympathy should be set aside for "the man in the case." (Houghton Mifflin Company.)

MYSTERY STORIES.

Stokes Silver Case. By Lynn Brock. The following is to be found on the front cover: "If you can stop on page 216, this mystery story costs you nothing."

"Who fired the second shot that killed Rupert Challice. Was it Captain Waddington, who had seen him wound himself during the war?

Was it MacPherson, friend of Waddington?

Did Lady Barrisford hold the gun that made the fatal shot? Or was it Sir Douglas Barrisford?

It might have been a wandering gypsy or some prowler in the woods.

Everybody entered the guessing contest for there were many motives for this murder, and everybody is left in a breathless state when the contest is over and the climax is reached. (Harper & Bros., New York.)

Murder in the Fog. By Paul Thorne. There are readers who find themselves very much interested in the solution of a mystery whether a mysterious murder in which Conan Doyle is at work, or one that occurs on the banks of the Hudson river near New York.

Here's a story that will interest almost any reader of detective stories: "A huge freighter is discovered drifting silent and deserted in the fog on Lake Michigan—its sole passenger dead." What became of the crew, who was the murderer is the work of the detectives? There is also a romance connected with this story and the Orient is not far in the background. (Penn Publishing Company, Philadelphia.)

The Studio Murder Mystery. By A. C. and Carmen Edington. This is another story which will make the reader sit up all night to finish during which time he will be doing a lot of thinking—in this he will not be alone, for the chief of detectives, Captain Smith, and Abraham Rosenthal, the owner of the Saperior Films, are lending all their energy to this baffling problem. The first page of the book gives a diagram which will be of special assistance in the reading of the story. (Reilly & Lee, Chicago.)

The France We Know.

French France. By Oliver Madox Hueffer. The New York Times says of the author's work: "This is one of the best books about France written in the English language." The foreword is by Katherine Woods.

The author whose writings are so popular with his readers has written in a most interesting style the life of the French people and the provinces of this most charming country. He goes into the homes and writes of the home life, he meets them on the open road and engages them in conversation, he describes the beautiful scenery, tells of the mountains and the valleys and of the little personalities of its people—in fact, it is the French France around which he has woven his interesting story. (D. Appleton & Co.)

FATHER WILLIAM.

A Comedy of Father and Son. By Donald Ogden Stewart, author of "Mr. and Mrs. Haddock in Paris, France." Mr. Stewart uses the following lines from "Alice in Wonderland" his introductory:

"You are old, Father William," the young man said.

"And your hair has become very white;

And yet you incessantly stand on your head—

Do you think at your age, it is right?"

The author's humor continues to entertain his readers for the story is full of laughs and entertainment. The drawings by Eldon Kelley and the jacket by Peter Arno adds special attraction to the story. (Harper & Brothers, New York.)

The Modern Library.

Among the new books received from the modern library are the following:

The Cabala. By Thornton Wilder. Introduction by Herbert Gorman.

The Death of Gods. By Dmotri Merejkowski. This is the romance of Julian and Apostate, translated by Guilbert Guerney, who also translated the author's "Leonardo Da Vinci."

Cyrano De Bergerac. Done into English verse by Brian Hooker, with a prefatory gesture by Clayton Hamilton. (New York city.)

OFF TO EUROPE.

The Official Pocket Guide to Europe. All about every country in Europe and a complete tour of the Holy Land and all the air services. "With schedules, distances and fares. This little book is No. 13 of Black's Blue Books" is in every way an up-to-date guide—nothing has been left out that would be of interest or add to the comfort of the traveler. (Real Book Company, Woolworth Bldg., New York. $3.25.)

Field Book.

Field Book of Marine Fishes of the Atlantic Coast. By Charles M. Breeder, Jr. Research associate in New York Aquarium and American Museum of Natural History. This is a pocket-sized book on marine fishes, describing the most prominent features of each species found in the waters from Labrador to Texas. It will interest the naturalist and the angler—also there are all kinds of classifications, drawings and color plates, (Putnam's Book, New York.)

National Health Series.

Among the interesting little books recently sent out by the National Health Series are the following:

Diabetes and Its Treatment. By Dr. Frederick M. Allen.

What Everyone Should Know About Eyes. By Dr. F. Park Lewis.

Care of the Mouth and Teeth. By Harvey J. Burkhart. It has always been more or less of a problem for the general public to receive authoritative information on matters of health. This is the reason that the National Health Council sends out these little attractively leather-bound books. The press of the country has tried editorially and otherwise to interest the public on matters of health. (Funk & Wagnalls, New York.)

Juvenile Books.

Heroes of Peace. By Ethel Clair Chamberlain With Illustrations by Margaret M. Head. In the foreword the author announces the fact that this book does not tell of the heroic deeds of the Heroes of War, but to the Heroes of Peace—the men and women who by their faith, courage and good deeds for their fellowman and for their country, too, are also heroes. They, too, have shown love and bravery for their country though not by gun or sword.

It is a collection of short stories that will be of special interest to boys and girls, among them being Jenny Lind, Frances R. Willard, David Livingston and Morton Stanley, Goethals, Edison, the Wright brothers, Lindbergh, Commander Richard Byrd, and the last story is that of Herbert Hoover, president of the United States. (George Sully & Co., New York.)

The Gold Trail. The story of how two boys followed it in '49. By Louise Platt Hauck. Illustrated by Harold Cue. From St. Joseph to San Francisco these two boys were members of an emigrant train, where they had the time of their lives. They saw human nature at its worst and also at its best. And their wishes were realized, for they saw the gold they had dreamed of, this experience having given them a confidence in themselves which, perhaps, made them better men knowing that they had been a part of the development of our country. (Lothrop Shepard Company, Boston.)

Fifty Originial Cryptogram Limericks (Rhymes in Code). First series. By George W. Wilson. This is a most interesting substitute for the Crossword puzzle. The author's purpose is to give the readers a unique entertainment and mental recreation. The young readers will find lots of fun in finding the solution to those coded limericks. (George Sully & Co., New York.)

Children's Books.

The World of Make-Believe. By Maud Wilcox Niedermeyer. This delightful book is for the little folks who are always ready to hear about the Brownies who live in Fairyland. All children like to hear about the Frost King in his battle against Spring with the Tulips standing guard. There are stories for boys and stories for girls, with the most fascinating illustrations by Helen Tilgner. It is a beautiful little book and just the kind of stories that the little folks will like to hear read over and over again. (George Sully & Co.)

The Glori-us Game, or Seven Days of Planting. By Bertie Roberts Chambers. This is a very unique little book bound in a beautiful shade of blue. The idea is to train the mind of the child in some special way each day. For instance, Wednesday is Glad Day; Thursday, Love Day; Day; Friday, Open Day; Saurday, Radiant Day; Sunday, Influence Day; Monday, Universe Day, and Tuesday, Service Day.

"Written in love and bound in love,
This booklet comes to you.
Read it and live it and send out its thoughts,
And they will rebound to you."

More of Milly-Molly-Mandy. Told and drawn by Joyce Lankester Brisley. The author's first book was such a success that she was persuded to write another. Thousands of children will greet Miss Brisely and Milly-Molly-Mandy with open arms and many will be the letters og appreciation received by the author. (George Sully & Co., New York.)

LITERARY DRIFTWOOD.

Professors Phelps picks his favorite Oppenheim, William Lyon Phelps, professor of Yale unevristy and author of many literary works, recently wrote that he had read 30 of E. Phillips Oppenheim's novels, and that of them all his favorite is "The Treasure House of Martin Hews."

"This is a man's world, not a woman's world," says Irvin S. Cobb. "They may talk all they please of the equality of the sexes, and on the statute books it may sem to exist, but when you bring this thing down to essentials, it's not worth the ink it took to print it with." And to prove it Mr. Cobb has written the recently published "This Man's World."

"The South America Hoover Didn't See.

Just before his inauguration it will be remembered that President Hoover paid a flying visit to South America. Now comes forward Miss Annie S. Peck, globe-trotter and mountain climber, to advise him of what he missed. In fact, she has a lecture on the subject delivered through the Board of Education Lecture Bureau of the New York City Schools. Miss Peck's book on "Industrial and Commercial South America" is published by the Crowells.

CURRENT MAGAZINES.

The Red Book for May has many interesting stories—

"She Asked of Life Two Things" is the title; and it was written by Harvey O'Higgins just before he died a few months ago, and is likely to be his most memorable short story.

For everybody who loves Huck Finn and Tom Sawyer and Penrod—that is, for the whole American people—we have a real boy story that is a knockout. It's by that new and very versatile young writer, Frederick Hazlitt Brennan, who is making a big hit in the magazines and in Hollywood. "Pieface and the Poet Maid" is a treat for young and old, male and female.

When Margaret Culkin Banning sent in her new novel, "Excitement," we saw at once that here is a great story, showing the social life of America today as no other novel. These people, acting and thinking in this way, did not exist a few years ago; here they are all about us. We see them and hear them everywhere; and Mrs. Banning gives us a great and satisfying understanding in this stirring novel of American social life. "Excitement," which has a big installment in The Red Book Magazine for June.

Herbert Hoover's 1,200-acre farm in Kern county, California, is not a show place. There is not a building upon it which is not practically employed. In the superintendent's office there is no excess of furniture. I looked around the walls of the office for a photograph of the president. There was none. Evidently nobody makes the attempt to flatter the vanity of the owner. Indeed, except for the word "Hoover Farms" over the gateway, and the same words which appear upon the box labels in which the fruit products are packed, there is no outward indication of the president's association with the place—Freeman Tilden in World's Work.

Olga Samaroff Leader in Music World, Coming

Recent advices from Madame Olga Samaroff, head of the extension department of the Juillard Foundation, of New York, that she will probably visit Atlanta in the near future, have aroused keen interest among local music lovers.

The visit of Madame Samaroff will be in response to efforts to interest the foundation in Atlanta's musical situation on the part of a number of local cultural leaders. They have been endeavoring for some months to bring Madame Samaroff here in the hope that eventually this city might secure some of the assistance the Juillard Foundation is already extending at other places.

The foundation was created to encourage and develop the understanding of and appreciation for good music in all parts of America, and it has already achieved wonderful results in New York and other cities.

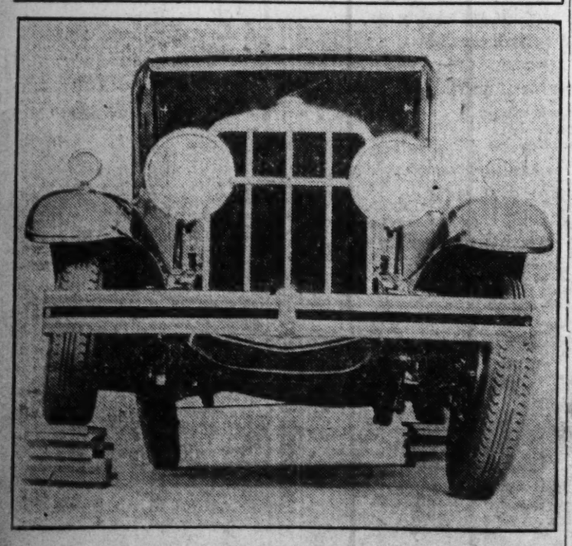

Madame Samaroff, in charge of the extension work, is one of the leading figures of the day in musical circles. She is the former wife of Leopold Tschaikowsky, famous conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony orchestra.

MEETING TODAY TO PLAN SERVICE HOME IN ATLANTA

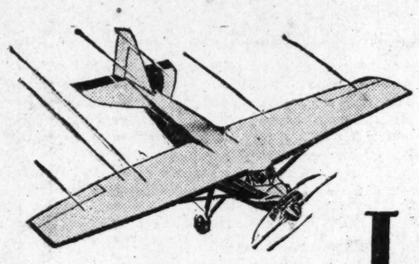

Establishing of a National Soldiers and Sailors' home in Atlanta will be discussed by Judge Max Land, chairman of the National Soldiers' home committee of Atlanta, at a meeting of the Passiy Lair, military order of the Serpent, at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon. The meeting will be held in room 3, auditorium armory, and will be open to the public.

According to Fred W. Benteen, gu gu grandississimo, and John P. Hamson, past department commander, United Spanish War Veterans, a good musical program has been prepared.

A Test of Flexibility

Showing the remarkable flexibility of the Franklin chassis, one of the chief factors which provides the comfortable riding qualities of this air-cooled car regardless of the type of road travelled. Note that the right front wheel and the left real wheel are elevated on blocks of wood yet the body retains its normal straight-forward position. This is typical of all Franklin cars with their full elliptic springs providing a cushion like effect over the roughest roads, with no discomfort to driver or passengers.

LIEUT. REGINALD D. THOMAS . . . Aviator U. S. N. R. Winner of the Schiff trophy for the greatest number of flying hours without accident. Instructor of aeronautics, Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

HUPMOBILE'S new program has cut all prices . . . reductions up to $260

When HUPMOBILE announced its radical price reductions on all models, Lieut. Reginald D. Thomas, aviator of the United States Naval Reserve, was one of the very first purchasers. He snapped up the opportunity. He drove away with a smart new HUPMOBILE cabriolet and a fat cash saving in his pocket.

And he volunteered this statement:

"Specifications of materials used in the HUPMOBILE compare more closely to those used in the best aeronautical engines, than to those of any other moderately priced car that has ever been brought to my attention."

Lieutenant Thomas knows motors . . . and motor cars. For 12 years he's trusted his life to motors—in the air. Anything mechanical is an open book to him. He won the Schiff trophy for the greatest number of flying hours without accident, and the latest ex-President of the United States presented it to him. He teaches aeronautics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

He chose a HUPMOBILE not alone on its magnificent reputation, its obvious style and beauty, its speed and power, or even its new price allure, but on the quality his expert eyes could see at a glance!

LIEUT. THOMAS stepping into his new HUPMOBILE cabriolet. Chosen because "materials used in HUPMOBILE compare more closely with those used in the best aeronautical engines, than with any other moderately priced car ever brought to my attention."

The Organization and Sales Methods of Big Business Should Be Applied to Agriculture—America's Biggest Business
From a Painting by William H. Howe

Wanted---Crop Salesmen!

BY RALPH W. GWINN

EVERY important national industry has its salesmen and national sales organization except the farmers. They have tried for twenty years to be their own salesmen and failed. Naturally they would. As salesmen and marketeers they have gained the reputation of being "our poor farmers, our ignorant farmers, our fool farmers."

Of course, farmers cannot farm and be salesmen, too. But the fact that they have been forced to produce and, at the same time, to try to sell for themselves has developed a national farm problem, ten years of intense political agitation and, finally, a national election last November on farm relief.

As a result of all the political discussion, tiresome as it is getting to be, the public thinking about farmers is changing. We begin to see that as producers—the only possible function farmers can perform—they have succeeded and, in many respects, magnificently. They have improved continuously the quality of their grains, fruits, vegetables, meats, and dairy products. They have doubled and sometimes trebled the quantity of their yields. Therefore, they have not brought on the farm problem as farmer-producers. Lack of salesmanship has.

Whether the farmers have been at fault for trying to do what was hopeless for them, or whether business men have been at fault for failing to grasp their opportunities and responsibilities as salesmen to serve agriculture (which is their peculiar function), does not matter. The fact remains that salesmanship for agriculture is an undeveloped art. As in farming, if you don't know how, you fail. Just anybody can't sell agricultural produce and its by-products any more than he can sell oil or steel products or automobiles.

How is it possible that untrained men and small, struggling, competing sales organizations, numbering sometimes three or four hundred in a single state, can sell fruits, vegetables, daily products, other products and their by-products for the food-farmers anything like as well as a few closely organized national oil companies sell refined oil and by-products for crude oil farmers and drillers. Agriculture, being national in its production, is under even greater necessity of being served by sales organizations which are national in scope—otherwise it breaks down in confusion.

The work of the oil companies brings out some interesting farm contrasts. They do not own and operate oil farms in a dozen states. They are not farmers. They are primarily national and international sales organizations taking the crude oil from landowners and porducers. Their good sales development and discovery of countless by-products made nearly all the crude oil landowners not only prosperous but rich. Before that these landowners were as poor as any other farmers. They could not have thrived by just letting all possible consumers come and get their oil products as best they might. Their progress depended entirely on how well the sales companies refined and converted the raw mineral into desirable forms and sold them at lower and lower prices to increasing numbers.

Strange as it may seem, sales organizations that find every nook and cranny of the globe, exist as a matter of course in almost all other fields except agriculture—ranging from steel, cement, copper and motors to soap and toothpaste. Agriculture's poor little baskets of food leave the farm gates to wander about and find markets quite by chance. Leaving the producer's home before they have a consumer's home to go to, they fall inevitably into the hands of many traders, speculators and salesmen by the wayside. Not one of these traders, in fruits and vegetables especially, is able to put on a thoroughgoing sales and advertising campaign to develop, organize and actually know the possible markets, even for products in the raw state, to say nothing of developing by-products for home as well as foreign markets. They do not represent a sufficient area of production or comprehend a wide enough area of consumers to enable them to do so.

There are a few outstanding exceptions: Armour and Swift have done a good job selling and advertising meat products. On the average, meat farmers have been at least more successful than the producers of other farm products. That is because the packers give farmers the benefits of their ability to make the farmers' raw produce more than mere meat. They now utilize about 45 per cent of the animal that would otherwise be wasted by converting it into more than 100 by-products, ranging from the most valuable gland medicines and perfumes to buttons and fertilizers. Also, they have been able to make the vast differences in the quality and kinds of meat suit the great variety of consuming tastes and capacities. Without the advantage of the packer's laboratories, liver would still be thrown away as undesirable. Instead, it turns out to be among the most desirable foods. Farmers acting alone cannot set up the machinery for such experiments.

In another great agricultural field, Borden, Sheffield and Willow Brook in the east, National Dairies, Kraft, and Land O' Lakes Cooperative in the west, and Southern and Foremost in the south have begun national and sectional sales and the development of more uses for dairy products. But there is a vast field yet undeveloped. Many farmers would like to raise dairy cattle. They mean daily cash incomes. There are untold numbers of people who have been taught the health values of these products who are unable to get them. Many states produce for themselves less than one-fourth of the dairy products they consume and they consume less than one-fourth of what their health requires.

These companies have done only a little of what is possible when the full force of their scientific staffs shall have been brought to bear on raw milk. For example, about 85 per cent of all milk is water. The chemists now remove the water and ship the remaining 15 per cent, consisting principally of milk sugar and butter fat, to ice cream makers, bakers and other milk products users all over this country and abroad. The freight and handling costs are, of course, about one-sixth the cost of shipping the whole milk. Therefore a much greater market for milk is assured. About 150,000,000 pounds of dry milk were shipped in 1928. The prosperity of dairy farmers is generally speaking improving.

This illustrates again what one farmer or even a thousand farmers cannot do as salesmen for themselves. But a hundred thousand or more of them can, through such companies, get the benefits of enlarged markets for their raw products.

There probably would have been no national farm problem election if all farmers had been as well served by sales organizations as are the meat and dairy farmers.

One other exception should be mentioned —the work of two or three cooperative organizations marketing fresh fruits and vegetables in California. But they are prevented from achieving the best possible results because the sales and marketing of fruits and vegetables in the rest of the country is so helter-skelter that there is constant wasteful duplication of shipments. Two cars of produce are constantly arriving where one is plenty. This shows the necessity for national organization. A few unorganized, unco-ordinated areas destroy the economies and usefulness of the well organized areas. The markets are periodically glutted and spoiled for the producers of California and every other section. However, they show the way it should be done nationally.

Congressman Jones, of Texas, picturesquely describes what engineers, chemists and salesmen can do for the farmers in the southland. There King Cotton is ascending a new throne and establishing a new kingdom called Rayon. In the hands of the industrial chemist, cotton becomes as silk.

When we have, let us suppose, the National, the American or the Federated Agricultural Sales Corporations serving all agricultural producing sections as effectively as those before mentioned show the possibilities to be—then artificial supports for agricultulture will disappear. A lasting farm relief will have been achieved. But until then a federal crutch of $500,000,000 will be cheap if it will help to co-ordinate the food into a few marketing agencies and decrease the duplicating and wasteful agencies. Then they may do as good work in their field of distribution as the farmers are doing in their field of production.

Another aid, of equal value with the federal help to salesmen and marketers, will be to change the psychology of failure and defeatism which surrounds all thinking about this national enterprise of first importance. It is worse than that which surrounded the railroads a few years ago. No enterprise can succeed under such a cloud. The most able salesmen will not undertake selling; bankers will not lend money, the public will not invest to support marketing; food consumers themselves are adversely affected by food prices that are unreasonably high, due to manipulation and costly distribution. Nobody wants to go into a business which everybody says is a failure. Let's reverse the process of thinking and command the best business minds for our most important business!

Another example of very loose popular thinking is that the farmer overproduces, therefore he must be a chump. Yet nobody knows when we do produce more than the people could and should consume, if we were only intelligent enough to deliver the food from producers to consumers at prices they could pay. We may overproduce wheat and corn. Nobody can prove even that. But, generally speaking, the farmer is not fooled, for he knows that there are still great areas even in this prosperous country, especially during the winter months, where hundreds of thousands of people can scarcely ever afford fresh fruits and vegetables—and many need more bread.

In Vermont less than 10 per cent of the children have a regular supply of green vegetables and fruits in the winter months. The average child enjoys them at very irregular intervals. Yet this very spring three million boxes of golden fruit will rot on the citrus trees in Florida. Something goes wrong, not in the production, but in the delivery from Florida to Vermont. And it isn't the farmer. It isn't overproduction. The fault shifts squarely from the shoulder of the abused farmer to that of the much lauded American salesmen, forwarders, carriers, bankers and others who have always made, and must continue to make, distribution their special business.

Why is it considered more stupid for the growers to overproduce fruit than it is for scores of freight agents to overlook all those hundreds of thousands of dollars they could earn in freight receipts by hauling those three million boxes of surplus oranges and grapefruit from Florida to Vermont and other places? All that is necessary is that unnecessary bills for freight, handling charges and poor salesmanship be brought down so more and more consumers may buy. The farmers have done their part. They are ahead of the procession. The business men lag. It is their responsibility that these foodstuffs produced at low costs on the farms are dubbed "luxuries" in the retail markets and unsold.

Only twenty years ago almost all motor makers argued that it would be very dangerous to make many motors. Overproduction would be very easy. Few could afford to buy. In that year about 65,000 passenger cars and trucks were sold, at rather high prices. Just a few makers believed that at the right price unlimited numbers would develop the capacity to buy. In 1927 it was necessary to build in the United States alone 2,939,191 passenger cars and 477,653 trucks to supply the demand of the poor buying public.

How much easier it is to demonstrate that foodstuffs have never been overproduced. There is, practically speaking, no possibility of it. Yet we talk all the time about the great secret of farm relief being in the limitation of production. That is practically impossible, costly and rather silly in the face of the fact that there is so little real selling, so many hungry, so little study of how costs of distribution may be cut down so that sufficient food may be provided.

"A Good Job Would Suit Amy a Lot Better Than a Divorce."

BY ROBERT QUILLEN

"What Amy needs is work enough so she won't have no time to set around and wish for somethin' exciting to happen.

"They tell me Amy is thinkin' of gettin' a divorce. It ain't none o' my business, but she's makin' a fool of herself. John's a good man; good as any.

"Gettin' a divorce to marry another man is just like jumpin' out o' the fryin' pan into the fire. You ain't no better off.

"Women didn't use to get divorces like they do now. People think it was because public opinion was agin it, but that wasn't the reason.

"Women stayed at home all the time and didn't see no other men. If a woman's husband abused her an' was low down an' filthy, she got a notion all men was that way at home an' didn't expect nothin' better. She just resigned herself to workin' an' havin' babies an' maybe gettin' to Heaven for bein' meek an' long-sufferin'.

"Now-days, women get out more an' know lots o' men so they can make comparison. If a woman's husband is hateful, she knows plenty of men that ain't. An' like as not she's goin' to fall in love with one if he sets up to her.

"I don't believe in stickin' to a man that's so mean a skunk wouldn't claim kin with him, but it's foolish to quit a man that's decent an' expect to find one that's perfect. The perfect ones is all dead.

"If Amy divorces John an' marries again, she may be happy with the second one for a little while; but she'll begin to find fault with him, too, as soon as the shine wears off.

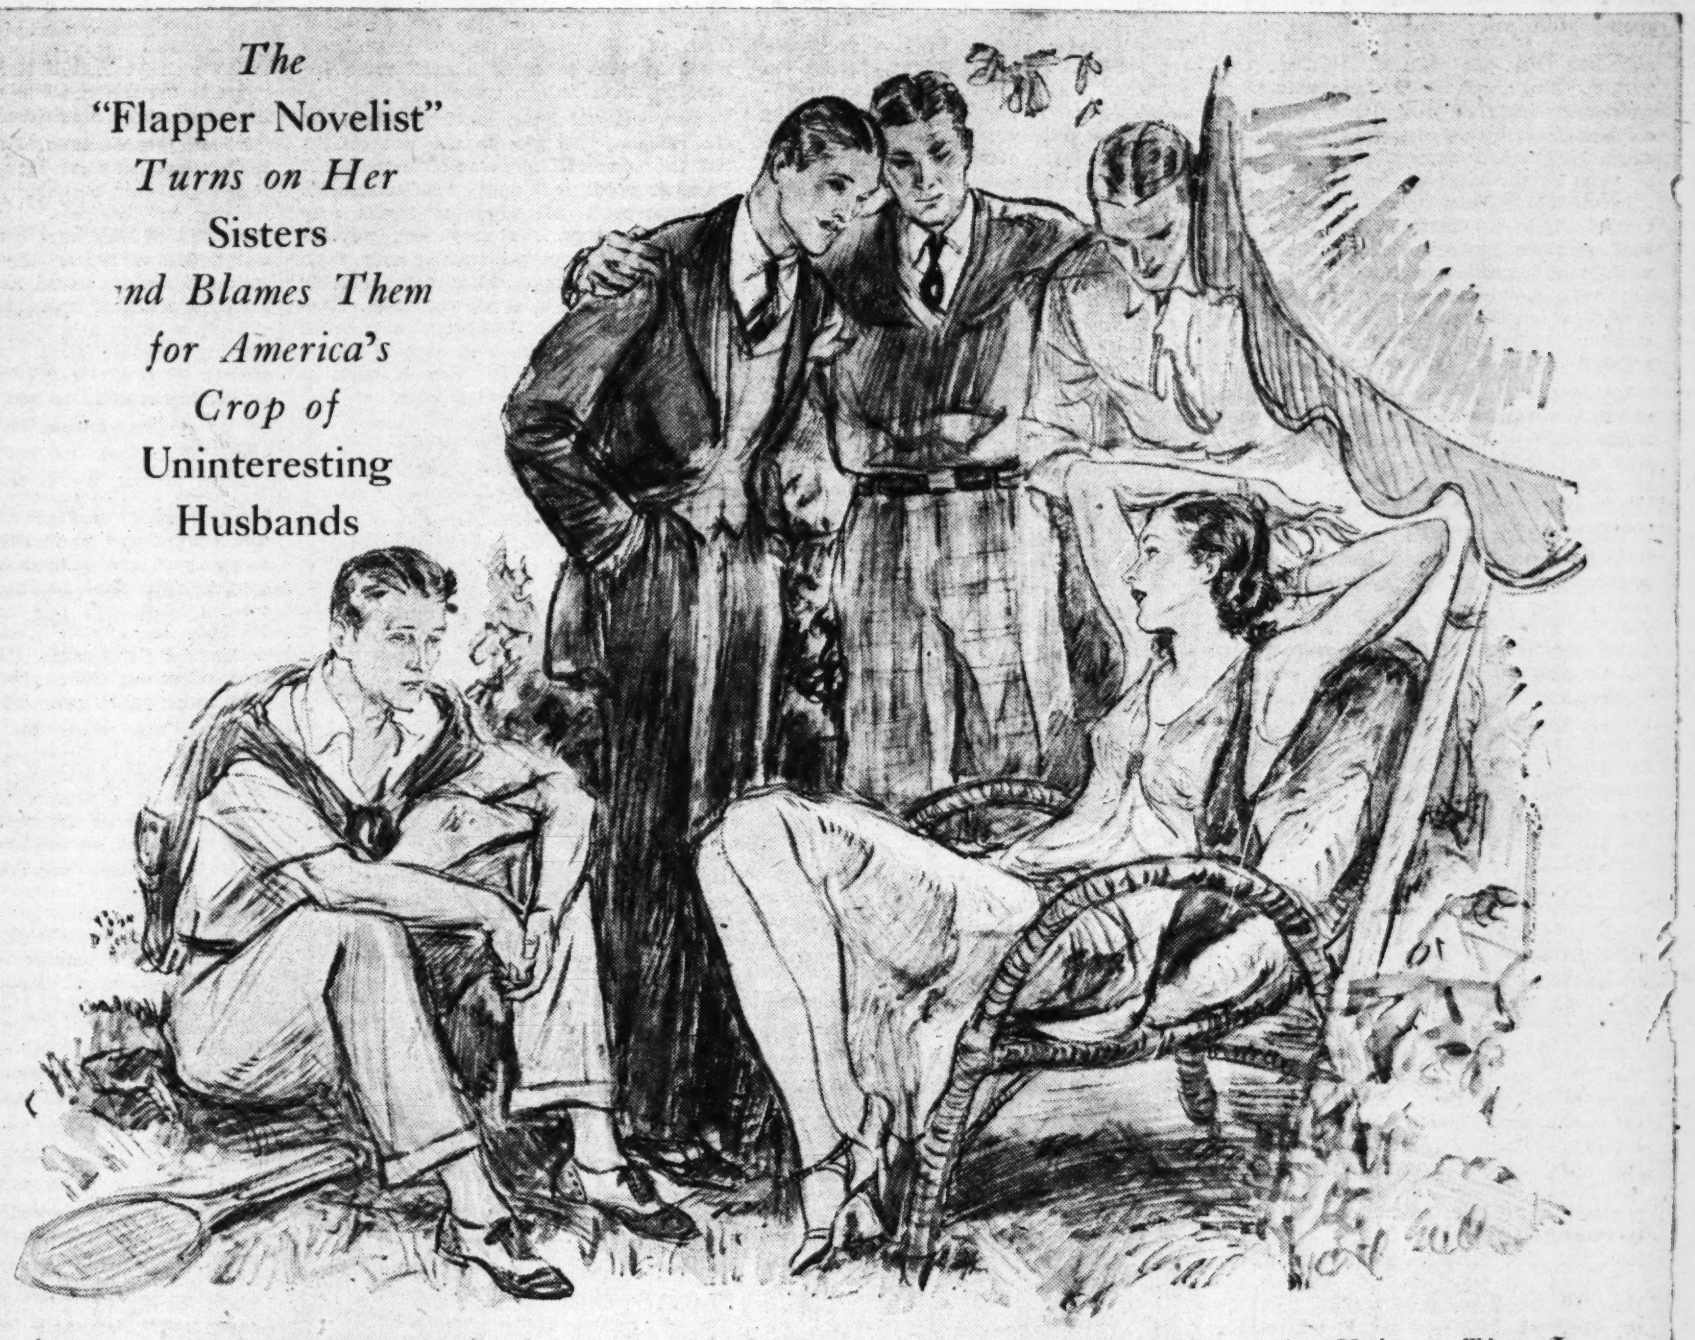

"No man keeps on seemin' wonderful after you live with him ever' day, an' a woman might as well make up her mind to be satisfied with one that don't. The thrillin' kind o' love, that keeps you from seein' faults, can't keep on lastin' forever.

"Marryin' is like fishin'. It's excitin' at first, but its just plain work to them that fish for a livin.'

"What Amy needs is work enough so she wont' have no time to set around an' wish for somethin' excitin' to happen. It ain't John she's tired of; it's loafin'."

Flappers and "Pears"

BY DOROTHY SPEARE

Author of "Dancers in the Dark," "A Virgin of Yesterday" and Other Novels

THERE were three flappers hanging out of the taxi next to mine, as I rode through the streets of New York. Although the term "flapper" has become out of date too recently to be attractively antiquated, no new epithet has sprung into use that could comprehensively describe the age, appearance and inclination of the squawking triplex model, the faces of which made a repetitious row at the taxi window while barking listless repartee in tense tones through the wide open spaces of Park avenue, the city's fashionable thoroughfare.

My taxi was held beside theirs for two minutes and a half of forced intimacy. I was but newly returned from a long sojourn in Europe. The last time that I had been in America I, too, was a flapper; moreover, I spent a great deal of time in depicting them.

I was called "the Flapper Novelist," and I had gloried in my calling.

But now——

First, those voices hit me—voices identical as the faces, shrill as the chatter of gleaming cockatoos under a hot sun.

"I tell you that stag line had about as much pep as a chain gang. I tell you I'm never going again without my own stag line, every one of 'em privately imported and sauced up with private imports!"

"I tell you you don't need as many as a whole stag line to get through the evening. If you have control of ten men that is enough. I've worked it out mathematically and I know!"

"Might as well get a whole stag line while you're about it. I say count on the gross and the nets will take care of themselves."

"You seem to forget the cost of one stag on the hoof. How much upkeep father'll stand, is my motto!"

"You don't seem to realize that ten men cost more than twenty-five. If you take ten you've got to pamper 'em with the best food an' wine you can get; if you take twenty-five, the herd instinct'll make 'em so happy to be together that a few wide gestures mixed with bootleg condiments'll go big!"

"Yes, but that same herd instinct makes you lose the personal touch; they forget who's been dinin' an' winin' an' conveyin' them the minute they strike the battleground. Now, I got a new system worked out, by which I can keep tab on no more than ten men"——

I was growing curious to know how one could keep tab on ten men, but just here the lights flashed green and we started to heave ahead. The turgidity of the traffic pushed me even nearer the thickly populated window to my left; both taxis moved about a foot, then stopped. The conversation had shifted, and for the first time it became apparent why the three game-students were taking the air.

"I told you this was the silliest street in the world to look for a man on."

"And I tell you it's the only method in sight, unless you want to move over to Broadway an' compete with the girls there."

"Will you please not get funny when we are up against an emergency like this? You know we can't walk into that tea without at least one man, no matter who the man is. Now, if any one wants to turn the grim business of this into a mere pick-up expedition"——

"Ah-h!" It was a cry of triumph that rang over the grinding of brakes as our taxis started once more to slide forward. "Look, oh, look!"

I looked, and signaled my taxi to stop at the side of the curb even before the tirade at my left had clamored to their driver to do the same.

A young man was loitering along the way, as only young men may loiter on Park avenue. The peaceful vacuity of his expression blended perfectly with the effortless carelessness of his garb and the stern nonentity of his cane. He loitered slowly, without thought or care for the taxi that had drawn up in front of me a few paces from his dallying approach. The moment was urgent; hurried whispers, sibilant as the cockatoo voices, came from the window.

"I'm sure we know him."

"Or at least we've danced with him."

"Doesn't matter, anyhow; he looks all right. We can drop him the minute we get there."

"Only thing to do is to rush him from all sides. Come on!"

A frank spectator, I leaned from my window to view the concerted attack which followed. The door in front flew open and three animated morsels of skinninity flung themselves upon the loitering youth.

"Idiot!" shrieked one.

"Twirp!" accused another.

"We thought we'd never find you!" contributed the third.

"Don't try to alibi us, we can see you forgot—we've waited hours at Pierre's—don't you know Phil said come at 4?"

The blissfully vacant expression of the storm center had become dimly overshadowed. In a vague doubt, he looked from one to another of the similar faces that surrounded him.

"I say!" His lips palely formed the faint defense. "Haven't you-all made some sort of a mistake"——

"Our date with you was the mistake!"

Inevitably, relentlessly, he was being towed into the taxi by three pairs of tiny paws. "Don't worry, we'll never make it again!"

The door banged, the taxi started away. The stag-hunters had got their game. Even if it was only a meek, spotted fawn, it was enough; a sufficient offering to lay upon the altar of popularity.

In the interest of the moment I had not realized that we had reached my destination. Now I climbed out and paid my driver, who met my still amused look with a sapient roll of the eye. Evidently, he, too, had been an interested spectator of the act just staged. And as I started to move away, his sapient eye rolled him into speech.

"All I got to say is this: the girls better begin to look out. They're all alike an' cut on too snappy a model for what they are!"

As I walked away my thoughts did not dwell upon the unrefreshing spectacle of miles upon miles of flappers, so perkily standardized. Instead, I was wondering about the startled fawn who had been snatched from his peaceful stroll on the avenue. And about his brothers, who were constantly snatched from their clubs or colleges in order to give a girl that sought-after, surrounded expression which must be worn by the maid of the hour.

From this eagerly chased and indiscriminately herded material is compounded the American husband, of whom all the world and his wife complain. Was there not some connection here between the method of amassing this material and the ensuing complaints over the accured article?

In the past I had extolled the American girl as the standard bearer of a new civilization. She was a glorious pioneer. She was man's equal, his comrade. She was fascinatingly interested and alive, in poignant contrast to her old-fashioned sister.

Then I went abroad and lived—not toured—on the Continent, where I was subjected to the stern discipline of abandoning most of my pet theories. I returned to America wildly curious to view my country with eyes unblinded by the proximity of habit. And this time, instead of concentrating my energies upon the American girl, I wanted to investigate her background—which means, as every one knows, her men.

Why does she complain that American men are uninteresting—especially as husbands? Why is the Continental man universally conceded to be more attractive than the American man? Why does the American man sink into a materialistic shell from which his glorious wife, the standard bearer of a new civilization, cannot shake him into any cultural give-and-take with which to satisfy her spiritual or mental needs?

Others have asked these questions before, but they have tried to solve them by going to the wrong sex. They have placed the American beside his Continental brother, sardonically or pityingly noting the main differences between them. No one seems to have thought that a more reasonable analysis of the situation may be obtained by a comparison of the American girl with the Continental woman.

It does not occur to the American girl that she should compare herself, favorably or otherwise, with any one at all. She is so often told that she is unique. She is so praised by the moderns and cursed by the antiques that she is brought up to consider herself the focal center of the only interesting universe there is.

For this attitude she cannot be blamed; it has been thrust upon her by others, myself among them. She cannot be blamed any more than the American man may be blamed for his uninteresting position in the background of the American social scene. But just here a little injustice becomes apparent; an injustice I have already indicated by citing her widespread complaints against her men, who, up to date, have not retaliated in proportion.

The phrase I have most often heard on the Continent to describe American men is "pears," which is French slang for "suckers." American men are pears, not because they let their women walk over them and use them as they please, but because they get nothing from their women in return for said peardom. (Of course, if one gets some return on one's folly, it is not folly; any Continental will assure you of that!)

The American pear crop is a strangely interesting topic to a European. He will discuss it with you for hours, whereas—this is the surprising thing—he will dismiss the American girl in one sentence. Everywhere I have found the same smiling condemnation: "Chic and amusing, oh, yes—but not at all clever."

Not clever! All my outraged femininity would rise up in me to combat this ridiculous ignorance. What about the success and eminence of our women in every imaginable career; what of our splendid women's colleges all over the country?

Such data were always met with shrugs. Of course, the American girl could do this and that. Had one not said that she was chic and amusing? But the fact remained that she was not clever. For the simple reason that she did not understand men.

At first this conclusion seemed to me too ludicrous to be given a thought. But I heard it repeated so often and in so many different forms, each one throwing a different light on the subject, that I was finally forced to consider it.

It was generally conceded that the American girl was expert in getting material things from her men. The American husband is world famous for his generosity and fidelity. But—begging my pardon—to get things out of men was not to understand them. If the American girl really understood men, why did she not make of them something that would content her? Why did she demand everything and then rail at the materialistic shell caused by her demands? It was in this inconsistency—always begging my pardon—that the American girl was not at all clever.

My opinions were finally worn down by what I called the limited European point of view, which "overshadowed my better judgment." To give that better judgment a fair chance I waited until I returned to America before definitely determining my own viewpoint in the matter. There, despite my indignation, the American girl succeeded in proving to me that her European commentators had reason.

American Men Are Called "Pears" in France Because They Get Nothing in Return for Their Devotion

Drawn by Addison Burbank

American girls do not understand men. They are the world's greatest experts in "working" men, but that is not the same thing. The items are as separate as the qualities which the American girl and her Continental sister seek for themselves. The American girl tries to be popular; the Continental woman educates herself to be charming. The American girl seeks to inspire men with the idea that she is attractive; the Continental woman seeks to inspire men with the idea that they are attractive.

The New York flappers found it necessary to kidnap a young man in order to seem popular. The idea of charm was conspicuously absent from the maneuver. Nor could the young ladies' actions have inspired their prey with the reassuring thought that he was abducted because of his attractions.

Also, when a boy of less than average attractions and mentality finds that every girl of his acquaintance is competing anxiously to add him to her necessary train of admirers, he is not given very much impetus to make himself more interesting than nature made him.

Every successful girl must be disciple of the religion, "Be nice to the wet smacks and the wows will take care of themselves." In other words, it is only by indiscriminate encouragement of whatever freaks may come along that one may look popular enough to get a really attractive man. Such wholesale encouragement is not flattering to any man who is at all analytical. Unlike his more stupid brother who is lulled into stagnation by the same method, he becomes cynical. And cynicism is quite as development dwarfing as fatuity.

From these elements there is formed the American husband, of whom his wife complains. And in reviewing our present social system I am forced to agree with the Europeans that we are not at all clever. If we really want our men to be different, why have we not been able to make them so?

It is the women who dictate the social system. The American girl has caused this wholesale herding of men about her because of her wish to be glorified. Unquestionably it is becoming to her to be glorified. But why does she not realize that glorification would be equally becoming to her men?

This is the foundation of the Continental woman's credo. She puts her man—yes, preferably only one—upon a pedestal and operates delicately, discriminatingly, on that basis. The question of whether or not man belongs upon a pedestal is irrelevant.

When a man is given room to breathe, he will expand. If the American girl, instead of lumping men together as a necessary wholesale factor and, later, trying to see which man will be the most efficacious at making her continue to feel like a queen bee, instead would be content to give fewer courtiers and specialized attention that she would wish for herself, her men would respond to the treatment and she would soon find them more attractive.

At our present state of civilization there is no reason why our men should be mere money-grubbing machines who can talk of nothing but business. No reason beyond the fact that they have been treated as social machines before they ever went into business, which, added to the incessant material demands built up by the same social phase, form a habit that develops into an impermeable shell. The Continental woman demands infinitely less of money or adulation, with the result that her men have time to breathe, mentally as well as physically.

The husband of the Continental woman is almost always younger appearing than his customarily younger wife. He is keen and vibrant and dominating, where, in the majority of cases, she is content to beam placidly in the background. American women think that the Continental wife's attitude is disgustingly cowlike, but cows, at least, are contented. How many American wives are there who are not restless and unhappy in spite of careers, surface brightness and passionately-guarded youth?

Nature means business. At the bottom of her heart a woman wants more than anything else in the world to have her mate, to love and be loved. The normal woman who outdistances her mate will always be unhappy, unless she finds a new mate—and too often she thinks that her only solution lies in seeking elsewhere.

The Old World laughs at our butterfly-like conception of human relationships, while we wonder why the Old World will not learn something of human liberty from us. We pity the unassuming Continental woman, but we love to talk with her fascinating husband. We do not stop to think that if we talked instead with her, we might find out the secret of her enviable content—and of her enviable husband.

Once, on the boat train to Cherbourg, I shared a compartment with two couples, one French, one American. I was tucked away in one corner, almost out of sight, when the first couple appeared. The girl came first. She was a tiny, febrile-looking thing wrapped in a mink coat upon which was pinned a voluptuous spray of orchids. She was not pretty, but her little hat was flaringly chic, the tailored suit beneath the mink coat obtrusively perfect, the pearls about her throat aggressively luminous. Any one would have known that she was American. With an exhausted air she slumped into the corner seat opposite me. When her husband came in, his arms full of magazines, she did not look at him.

For a few moments the compartment was full of effort to get the queen bee comfortably installed. A little table in front of her was piled high with magazines, boxes of candy, fruit and nuts and several different brands of liquid refreshment. The husband, who evidently had almost broken his neck to procure these ennui destroyers, asked his lady if she didn't think he had done well.

This timid bid for appreciation opened up a line of attack of which his wife availed herself, off and on, during the whole journey. The subject of the attack was Phil's extraordinary stupidity and lack of mental resource to bring Fanny such vulgar things as magazines when he knew she never wasted her time on hit-or-miss reading matter.

"It isn't as if you couldn't have gotten me the latest books in the same length of time. They have bunches of them all selected, wrapped and ready for you to take away!"

Before she had a chance to go into the matter with the thoroughness that she used later, Fanny was interrupted by the catapultic entrance of a little man, obviously a French man, who, after agitatedly directing his porter where to put his luggage, picked out the most comfortable remaining seat and sank therein, where he immediately surrounded himself with his newspaper. A moment more and a nondescript looking woman appeared, staggering under the combined weight of a lunch hamper and several messy paper parcels.

"If that isn't just like these Frenchmen," said Fanny acidly. "Did you ever see anything so disgusting?"

Jeannette, as her name proved to be, sat

A BLUE RIBBON SHORT STORY

By Octavus Roy Cohen

WHEN Mocha Williams entered the jewelry store he possessed five dollars in cash and a great deal of anticipation. He marched proudly to the installment department, slapped the five dollar bill on the desk, and addressed the clerk.

"Yonder's my las' installment, cap'n," he announced proudly. "I crave to git my diamond pin."

The white gentleman shook his head.

"Don't be absurd," he advised.

"D-d-d-don't be which?"

"Absurd," repeated the clerk. "Your wife, Electra, came in here not two hours ago, paid the last five dollar installment, and got that pin."

Mocha's countenance became the hue of desolated ashes.

"Sh-she couldn't!"

"She did!" The clerk sifted through some papers and produced the original contract. "Look it over for yourself, Mocha. When you and Electra came in here sixty weeks ago and contracted for that pin, you announced that you were buying it for her. You both agreed that either of you could pay the installments and that the pin was deliverable to either when the full amount of three hundred dollars should have been paid."

"But-but, cap'n . . . don't you remember that I has paid fifty-nine of them installments out of my own pocket, an' Electra ain't paid but the last one?"

The clerk shook his head. "I had no choice but to give her the pin when she paid that last five dollars."

"An'-an' you mean it's her pin now?"

"Yes."

Mocha staggered from the store into the bleakness of a January day.

Of course Mocha knew that the jeweler was right. The contract was just as he claimed; and it was true, too, that on the memorable day when the first installment was paid Mocha had announced pridefully that this was intended as a wedding present for Electra. But things had changed since then. O, gosh! how they had changed! Electra, the bride, and Electra, the veteran wife, were woefully different persons.

Until becoming acutely acquainted with Electra's stupendous capacity for spreading domestic misery Mocha had regarded himself as a pretty bad hombre. His temper was short and violent; he shunned work in all its phases and had imagined that married life would be an existence of luxurious idleness. In that he figured without the militant Electra.

Of martial affection not a trace was left on either side.

Of course the original idea of presenting the pin to Electra had long since been abandoned. He was plumb annoyed with his wife and didn't care how soon she knew it. It was his intention to get the pin and then sell it to good advantage. It never occurred to him that he might be tricked. . . .

So great was Mocha's righteous wrath that fear of his wife was momentarily dissipated.

He swung in at a modest, one-story cottage on Twenty-third street. He stamped across the little veranda and shoved the door open. A human menace greeted him.

Somehow, one's most stalwart fury could not prevail against Electra's forbidding might. And there was a promise of action in the fact that she was hatted and coated for the street.

Mocha's eyes took in more than that. He saw that she was flanked on either side by a suitcase. But before he could put anything into words, she struck the initial blow.

"Good-by, Useless!" she said sharply.

"S-s-says which?"

"I says good-by."

"How come?"

"I is goin' away."

"Wh-where to?"

"Nowhere. Ise gwine stay right heah in Bummingham—but not with you. Fum now hencefor'rd I'se gwine be Missis Mocha Williams on'y so long as it requires Lawyer Evans Chew to git me a divorce."

Mocha's eyes were focused on the gorgeous diamond which twinkled at him from her ample bosom. The pin in which it was set wasn't so hot . . . the jeweler had valued the setting at about twenty-five dollars. The single diamond represented the balance of the three hundred.

"Gimme that pin," he demanded desperately.

"Foolishment you utters!"

"It's mine."

"The jooler says it ain.t He says it's mine."

"I paid all them installments, didn't I?"

"All 'cept the last," she confessed. "That was the on'y one which was impawtant."

He contemplated assault, but discarded that idea before it took shape. Bitter experience had taught him that assaulting Electra wasn't the healthiest thing in the world. He stared in dumb, futile misery as she picked up her grips and started for the door. There she turned and bent upon him her most exasperating smile.

"As a husband, Mocha—you has been a total loss. But as an installment payer, you is the champeen of the world. Good-by!"

She was going, leaving Mocha wallowing in an abyss of woe.

The following day Mocha received formal notice from Lawyer Evans Chew that divorce proceedings had been instituted against him by the departed Electra. He visited the erudite attorney in the enny Prudential Bank building and confided to him that the sooner Electra got divorced away from him the happier he'd be. Then, as man to man, he inquired about the legal ownership of the diamond pin.

Lawyer Chew was verbose but specific. He made it unpleasantly clear that because of the way the contract was drawn, the pin belonged to whomever happened to have it—in the same manner, he explained, as the possession of money drawn from a double checking account. "In addition thereto," he announced sonorously, "you notified that jooler formerly that said diamond pin was intended as a gif' for yo' lawfully wedded wife, and that gives her the right of possession as well as the actual possession, duces tecum. In summary, Mistuh Williams, I would promulgate the decision an' rulement that the pin is yo' wife's, an' that she has same, an' preposes to keep it, ab initio and ad infinitum."

"Do you mean," inquired Mocha miserably, "that I cain't git it away fum her after I paid fo it myse'f?"

"Not a chance. Of co'se you has maybe got a moral right to it, but legally you ain't even got one leg to stand on."

Divorce proceedings were speeded up, and eventually there came a clear, frosty day in February when Mocha Williams found himself once again a single man . . . hopelessly broke and colossally unhappy.

Memory of that diamond pin rankled in his manly bosom.

He was convinced that legally he was beyond the pale. Morally, however, was another angle. He saw the thing clearly now—only reason Electra hadn't left him before was because she knew perfectly well he'd continue to pay installments on that pin . . . and then she'd go in and get it for five dollars. It was not difficult for Mocha to follow her mental processes. Goodness knows he had tricked others just as diabolically in the past.

He swung into action one freezing February night, when the streets were sheeted with ice, and pedestrians bowed their heads against the whining gale. He had seen Electra enter the Frolic theater shortly before dark, and he shivered on the curb across the street until she left. He knew where she was staying . . . over on Avenue B . . . and he knew that, barring a chance lift, she'd walk home.

Thereupon, he secreted himself in a dark alley. The nearest street light glowed dully in the sleet storm. Traffic crept slowly southward. Electra moved with difficulty in the general direction of her home.

She came abreast the spot where her ex-husband was hidden. He knew where the diamond brooch was . . . he had seen it flash as Electra stood in the lighted lobby of the Frolic buttoning her coat.

Mrs. Electra Williams discovered suddenly that something awful was happening to her. A figure bore down on her, and two powerful hands ripped the buttons from her coat. She stood in paralyzed terror as one of those hands closed around the diamond pin and wrenched it loose with a rapping sound. And by the time she emitted the first of a series of shrieks, the robber was vanishing down the stygian alley.

She did not recognize Mocha. Even if there had been the slightest suspicion, she wouldn't have credited him with the requisite courage. And so she stood still and sent her pleas for help shrilling out on the night air.

A crowd gathered like magic. A policeman arrived. The leaping figure of Mocha could still be discerned flying down the alley. A howling pursuit started, and it was given impetus when Mocha's eagerness caused him to slip on the glassy surface of the allay and go sprawling.

The fall stunned him and helped break his spirit . . . and he gave swift, clear thought to the situation in which he was likely to find himself.

He knew that his speed had slackened. He was gripped by the horrid fear that he was about to be caught. Suppose, then, that they did catch him? Even though he hadn't been recognized they'd find the pin. Then—five years, maybe ten—in Kilby prison. Not so good!

Discretion conquered avarice. He rounded the corner and flung the diamond pin into the gutter. He turned another corner just as the pursuers swung out of the alley.

There were many persons on the street into which Mocha had turned. Struggling to control his expression of terror, he settled into a walk. The chase promptly caught up with him, but no one eyed him askance. He heaved a sigh of vast relief. He had lost the pin, but at least he could continue to enjoy the effete delights of Alabama's largest city.

And then a new idea came to him. Perhaps—there was just the faintest chance—he might be able to find that pin. He had a fairly accurate idea of where he had thrown it. Of course it wouldn't do to return immediately to the spot . . . but in fifteen or twenty minutes. . . .

It was an excellent idea. But Mocha neglected to take into consideration a black, wispy, apologetic colored person of the male persuasion. He gave no thought to Frantic Marshall because, at the time, he hardly knew that such a person existed.

Frantic Marshall's character approached the human negative. He was just a wee bit more than five feet in height, amazingly skinny, and he walked with an outward shuffle as though wondering whether he actually had a right to the sidewalks of Birmingham.

The few who knew Frantic intimately, liked him. He had a heart ten times as big as his shriveled body.

During all of Frantic's lean and uneventful twenty-six years there had been little joy in his life save the thought of romance. That any amorous adventure upon which he embarked could be successful never occurred to the apologetic little man. He had, for instance, courted Canary Gaunt for no less than four years, and so far as he knew the positive Canary wasn't aware of much more than the mere fact of his existence.

Frantic's friends might have warned him against Canary had they considered that his suit had a chance for success. As it was they preferred to let him keep his gossamer dreams. Nobody liked to hurt Frantic. He was so eagerly friendly, so woebegone, so pathetically grateful for every kind word. It was ironical that he should have directed his affections toward Canary Gaunt—not that there was anything wrong about Canary except that she most certainly wasn't the sort of woman who could make Frantic happy.

Well, after all, Canary didn't even know Frantic was courting her. In all his life Mr. Marshall had never earned more than ten dollars a week. And on ten a week one cannot court a woman like Canary with any degree of success. Frantic did not press his suit—he feared a rebuff. He feared almost everything.

Tonight he trudged toward his tiny room on the top floor of Sally Couch's Cozy Home Hotel for Colored.

He stood at the curb patiently waiting his chance to cross through the skidding traffic. And it happened that something caught the gleam of a headlight and reflected that gleam into Frantic's eyes.

He frowned. He stooped. His fingers quested in the gutter, and when the emaciated frame was straightened, Mr. Frantic Marshall was in possession of the three hundred dollar diamond pin which recently had been the property of the large and powerful Mocha Williams.

Frantic Marshall was no fool. He was certain that his trophy was genuine. His watery eyes blinked, his breath came fast—and he envisioned the reward which would be offered by the person who had list this jewel.

That night he was emboldened to call upon Miss Canary Grant. Canary was glad enough to see him, the miserable weather having blasted her plans for the evening. She found herself in the company of a new man. Not that Frantic was any larger physically, but he seemed to have expanded mentally. As the evening progressed he even presumed to have an idea.

"You know what, Canary?"

"What?"

"A swell lookin' gal like you ought to wear diamonds."

"Fummadiddles! Where at would I git diamonds fum?"

"O—maybe if some feller was crazy 'bout you, an' you was willin' to commit matrimony with him—maybe he'd give you anyhow one diamond. A big one."

"Reckon he'd buy it fum the ten cent store, too."

"No. I mean a real, genuwine one. Do you like diamonds, Canary?"

"They is the craziest things I is about."

Frantic rushed in. "S'posin' it was me, sugarplum? S'posin' I gave you a real swell diamond—would you be willin' to become engaged to me?"

"I—I is awful fond of diamonds, Mistuh Marshall."

"An' of me, too?"

Canary eyed him speculatively. "I like you awful good, Mistuh Marshall."

"An'—an' you reckon, if I was to git that diamond fo' you—you might think about performing matrimony with me?"

She blushed and giggled. "I—I reckon I might, Frantic."

"Hallelujah!" He started forward impetuously, but she waved him away. "Not yet, Frantic. Wait 'til we has seen that diamond."

That was as far as Mr. Marshall could get. Yet when he stepped into the bitter night again there were wings upon his feet and a song on his lips.

He was not a discriminating person. He didn't bother to analyze . . . it never occurred that Canary was probably a mercenary person who was willing to take him because she wanted a diamond.

For three days Frantic existed on hope and misery. He touched heights of delight and depths of despair. Canary Gaunt kept him dangling. Diamond first, she insisted; else how could she believe that he really loved her? And Frantic's honesty compelled him to watch the three daily papers while he hoped and prayed that no advertisement would be inserted.

Fate smiled upon him . . . or at least so he thought. No one announced through the newspapers that a diamond pin had been lost. Had Frantic known more than he did, it might have occurred that stolen property is not usually advertised for. But he had no idea except that this pin had been lost, and now—when no one claimed it—he felt that he had done even more than the average honest man was called upon to do. He gazed upon the pin and called it his. And that night he made his magniloquent presentation to the fair Canary.

And so she wore the pin with great gusto. She wore it for three days, and it adorned her gown the night Frantic Marshall escorted her to the big dance at the lodge rooms of the Sons and Daughters of I Will Arise.

Every colored notable was present. Lawyer and Mrs. Evans Chew, Dr. and Mrs. Lijah Atcherson, Florian Slappey, Epic Peterson, Director and Mrs. J. Caesar Clump, Mr. and Mrs. Eddie Fizz, Opus Randall, Welford Potts, Mr. and Mrs. Simeon Broughton, Semore Mashby, Dr. and Mrs. Brutus Herring.

And Mocha Williams!

Mocha was struggling desperately to find happiness in single blessedness. But his beautitude was infected with bitter memory of the two hundred and ninety-five dollars he had paid on the diamond pin which was now lost somewhere in the streets of Birmingham.

He danced languidly and without interest. He eyed all women with distaste. He considered himself a confirmed misogynist. But about ten-thirty something caught his eye: a glittering, gleaming, scintillating something which struck a chord of memory. He waited until the end of the dance and then presented himself before Miss Canary Gaunt.

"Who you dancin' the next one with, Canary?"

She smiled demurely. "You!"

"Hot dam! Ain't you tootin'?"

The music commenced. Canary slid into Mocha's arms and they hopped away over the polished floor. Mr. Williams, using excellent strategy, approached the subject casually.

"You sure do look swell tonight, Canary."

"O! hush yo' mouf, Big Boy."

"Ise se'ious. You is the best lookin'est gal in this whole ballroom."

She gazed into Mocha's eyes with new interest. He was a good looking chap; a man much more after her own heart than the insignificant little shrimp to whom she was pledged.

Mocha looked down at her. "Tha's a pretty pin you go on."

Canary flushed with pride. "Ain't it? It's a genuwine diamond."

"Where at did you git it?"

She frowned . . . then smiled brightly. "My fiansay gimme it."

"Who he?"

She jerked her head toward a corner of the room where the wistful figure of Frantic was almost concealed behind a small potted palm.

"That li'l half pint," she explained.

"Great sufferin' tripe! How come a gorgeous gal like you to engage herse'f to a runt like him?"

"He gimme this pin," she explained, defensively. "There's lots of fellers woul'n't be so ginrous as that."

Mocha was thinking fast. The coveted pin was near at hand. He was staunchly determined to acquire it. And there wasn't any mistaking which pin it was.

"Where did Frantic git that pin at?" Mocha inquired.

"Bought it," she explained with some pride. "Fo' me."

The music stopped abruptly on a large blue note. Mocha bent his most seductive glance on Canary.

"If you gwine lemme see you again some time, Miss Gaunt?"

"We-e-e-ell, Ise an engaged lady——"

"Shuh! 'Taint really bein' engaged when the man is Frantic Marshall."

She looked up at him coyly out of the corners of her eyes.

"All right, Mistuh Williams."

He moved away, thinking heavily. And Canary Gaunt, utterly dazzled, found little of interest in her fiance.

Canary had been impressed. What a pity that Frantic wasn't more like the large and positive Mocha. But then she heaved a vast sigh. Reckon a man couldn't have ev'ything; looks an' size an' diamonds, too. She saw Frantic approaching and favored him with a radiant smile which sent him scooting up to the very zenith of happiness. Canary was mercenary, perhaps, but she was not lacking in sportsmanship.

All through the balance of the evening Mocha Williams slouched in a corner and engaged in plain and fancy thinking. He never had thought so much in all his life. Of course he knew just what had happened: Frantic had found the pin and presented it to Canary.

Mocha made his exit shortly before the dance ended. He proceeded on foot to the neighborhood where Canary Gaunt lived, and took up his post across the street, under a coldly leafless tree. And there he shivered for almost an hour. Frantic and Canary had stopped at the Gold Crown for some hot chocolate. Their good-bys were not briefly said. But when eventually she entered the house and Frantic's emaciated figure descended the porch steps to the street, Mocha detached himself from the shadows and fell into step beside him.

"Hello, Frantic," he said casutlly. "Goin' t'ords town?"

"Uh-huh." The little man eyed his companion doubtfully. "You—you is Electra Williams' husband, ain't you?"

"I was. I an' Electra is now divorced away fum each other. My name is Mocha."

"Much obliged to meet you, Brother Williams."

They walked on in silence. Mocha broke it. "How 'bout us goin' down to Bud Peaglar's fo' a barbecue san'wich, Frantic?"

Mr. Marshall was overjoyed. He wasn't used to receiving invitations. For the moment he felt that Mocha was a very delightful person.

But after they had cemented their friendship over Bud's delicious barbecue and two cups of steaming coffee, Mocha drew the little man into a corner of the poolroom and touched firmly on the subject which was of greatest interest to him.

"You is kind of crazy 'bout Canary, ain't you, Frantic?"

"O, man! She is the fondest gal I is of."

"Where at did you git them swell pin you gave her?"

Mr. Marshall immediately plunged into a description of the imaginary process by which the pin had been acquired. As he spoke, Mr. Williams' face grew stony, and when the speech was ended he transfixed Frantic with a baleful eye.

"I mean," he explained, "where did you really git the pin?"

"I—I boughten it——"

"Liar what you is! You found that pin in the gutter on 17th street."

Mocha knew! Frantic knew he knew! And all the stunned Mr. Marshall could do was shake his head and emit moaning sounds.

"Reason I know 'bout that pin, Mistuh Frantic Marshall, is 'cause I boughten it my ownself with my own money. I gave it to my one time wife, Mrs. Electra Williams."

Frantic was thoroughly frightened. "Then it's her pin, ain't it?"

"Sure it is," bluffed Mocha, "an' I crave to present it back to her."

Frightened as he was, Frantic was not entirely a fool.

"Hmph!" he said. "I don't hahdly believe that."

"I don't give three durns what you believe. I boughten that pin an' I demand that you return it back to me."

"I can't do it, Mocha. I done give that pin to Canary."

"'Twasn't your'n to give."

"I—I found it."

"Don't matter. That pin was mine an' Electra had just been wearin' it. It cost th'ee hundred dollars cash money."

"Gee manety! Th'ee hund'ed——"

"Dollars, tha's what. I want it, an' ain't gwine stan' fo' no foolishment."

Mr. Marshall looked one way and saw the deep sea. He glanced in the other direction and found himself confronted by the czar of Hades. But, rising triumphant above all his grief was the certainty that he could not—and would not—ruin himself in the eyes of the fair Canary.

"I—I cain't git it off my fiansay," he announced.

Mocha shrugged. "All right. I'll call on you frequent when you gits to the penitential."

"Wh-when who gits to which?"

"When you gits to the state penitential."

"You says terrible words, Mocha, but they don't seem to make no sense."

"They make sense, all right enough. Now git this, Mistuh Frantic Marshall, that there pin was stole off Electra's shirtwaist while she was walking' down 18th street a few nights ago. The robber got away. Nobody knows who he was. But"—and Mocha's eyes blazed triumphantly—"but suppose Electra or somebody else was to reckernize that pin Canary is wearin' an' she was to tell 'em that you give it to her an' they was to check up how you lied 'bout buyin' it. . . . I ask you then, Mistuh Marshall, how would you prove that you wasn't the man which stoled that pin off Mrs. Electra Williams?"

"It looks," vouchsafed Frantic, "that there ain't but two things I can do, an' bofe of 'em is wrong."

"Meanin' what?"

"I can tell Canary the truth an' she maybe tells other folks an' I go to jail. Or I let her go on keepin' the pin an' it gits recognized an' I does likewise. Any which way I is gwine lose the gal I is craziest about."

Mocha waved his hand. "That don't make no neverminds with me. I crave that diamond pin back, an' I ask you heah an' now—what is you gwine do 'bout it?"

Frantic indulged in thought.

"Ise gwine straight down to see Electra," he announced. "Ise gwine tell her I foun' the pin an' ask cain't I buy it off her on the installment plan."

Mocha's complexion became a pale lavender. "You—you cain't do such!" he said quickly.

Frantic looked at him in surprise. "Ain't nothin' else I can do."

"Now, listen," Mocha was pleading. "Don't you go telling Electra, 'cause the minute you do, she gits that pin back an' you is plumb ruint. She ain't got no mo' heart than a snake."

"I reckon was I to offer her th'ee hundred dollars——"

Prospects of seeing the ex-Mrs. Williams enriched by three hundred dollars did not at all appeal to Mocha. And he knew that he was up against a stone wall. Frantic was scared enough, but not in the right way.

Mocha argued. He begged. He cajoled. Words rolled off Frantic's narrow shoulders like raindrops from a slate roof. And finally, in sheer desperation, Mocha told his entire story. He told if his miserable married life; of Electra's shrewdness; of her cold blooded scheming to get a three hundred dollar pin for five dollars . . . and then leave him flat. He played for the sympathy which one man must accord another in such an affair, and by the time he finished Frantic was almost in tears.

"Golla!" he said. "Hard luck is the most thing you has had. 'Cept you was sure fortunate the law didn't catch you when you stoled that pin offen yo' wife."

"I know . . . I know, Frantic. But cain't you see where I an' you stand now? You got to get that pin off Canary. Minute Electra sees it you is sunk . . . 'cause even though you is my friend I would swear I never stoled it, an' they'd right away think it was you."

"Tha's reasonable," confessed Mr. Marshall. "An' I ain't cravin' to decorate no jail. But just the same, I don't see how I can git that pin off Canary."

"Borrow it," suggested Mocha, eagerly. "Le's you an' me be partners. Way things stand now I ain't gwine git nothin' back fo' my two hund'ed and ninety-five dollars; so I'se willin' to split even with you."

"Wh-what would I want to borrow it for?"

"Tell her you want to have it made into a ring 'stead of a pin on account it looks mo' engaged. That stone is worth two hund'ed an' seventy-five dollars by itse'f, an' Electra wouldn't never recognize just the stone. It's the whole pin that's dangerous. Tha's one thing Ise tellin' you, Frantic—us has got to take the diamond out of that pin, no matter how we does it."

"Tha's right," Frantic was impressed. "But it seems like, Mocha, I is runnin' all the risk. I on'y found the pin, but you stoled it——"

"I paid fo' it first."

"Just the same you stoled it. An' I don't see where you git off at if I do change the pin into a ring."

Truth to tell, neither did Mocha. The more complicated the affair became the more apparent it was that he was again holding the bag. And Frantic's affection for Canary had imparted to that underdone gentleman a surprising strength. Mr. Marshall finally summed up the situation:

"I don't hahdly see where you figgers in this a-tall, Mocha."

"How come not?"

"That pin is mine 'cause I found it, or either Electra's 'cause you gave it to her."

Mocha's face hardened. "Yeh! An' all I got to do to blast you is to tell Electra where the pin is at, an' then where would you be?"

"Nowhere," admitted Frantic seriously. Then his face brightened. "I got an idea," he announced.

"What is it?"

"Suppose I buy out all yo' rights, titles, an' interests to that there pin fo' fifty dollars cash money? An' that price includes yo' promise that you won't give Electra no clew 'bout who has got the pin."

Mocha was perturbed—but interested. The more he considered the matter the more he became convinced that he would be wise to accept this offer. Certainly fifty dollars was a great deal better than no dollars at all.

The bargain was struck. The following morning they met in front of the Champion theater and Frantic Marshall paid over to Mocha Williams the sum of fifty dollars.

"Now, you ain't got no rights in that pin whichsoever," Frantic reminded.

"You said it!"

"An' furthermo' you promise not to say nothin' to Electra, nor neither nobody else."

"I promise." Mocha was generous. "That pin is you'rn now, Frantic."

"Hot diggity dawg! It sho' is."

He minced down Eighteenth street and Mocha stared after him without enthusiasm. Frantic considered the affair at an end. Of course he'd try to convert the pin into a ring so that Electra could not possibly recognize it.

Mocha knew that he should be satisfied. But he wasn't. All the harsh unpleasantness of his nature came to the surface. He was moody and ruthless. He determined grimly to double-cross Mr. Frantic Marshall.

Mocha had no compunctions about that or anything else. And he knew he had to work fast, because it was certain that the minute Frantic got his hands on that pin the setting would be destroyed and there would then be no chance in the world of recovering the stone.

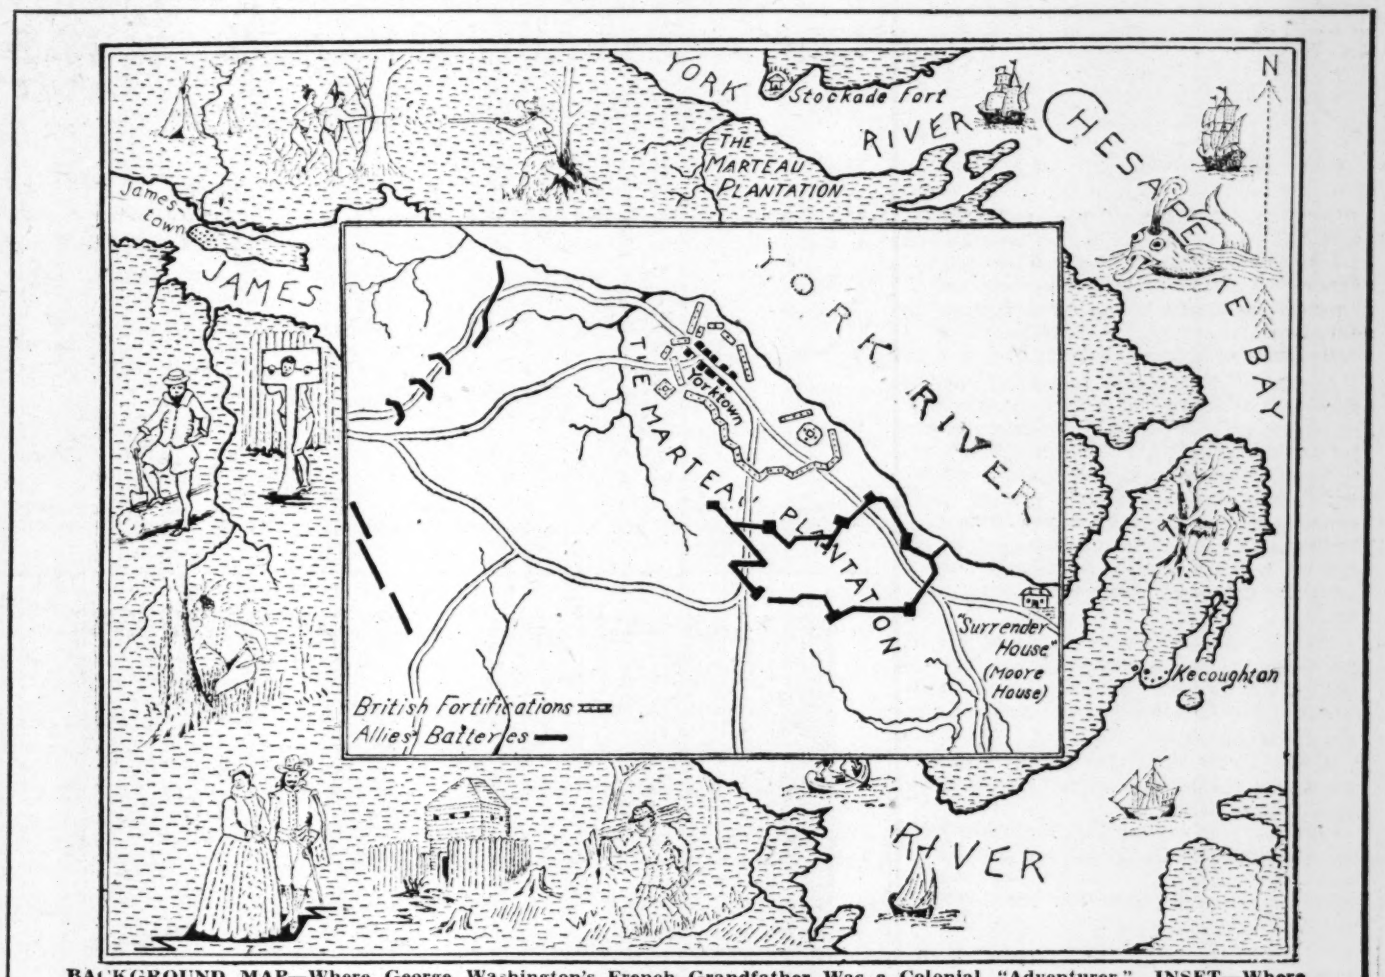

Mr. Williams was no blind man where

Washington's French Grandfather

BY FRANK AND CORTELLE HUTCHINS,

Authors of "Virginia, Sword of Liberty, etc.

BACKGROUND MAP—Where George Washington's French Grandfather Was a Colonial "Adventurer." INSET—Where Washington ended the American Revolution on His French Grandfather's Plantation.

IT IS little known that George Washington was partly French—he did not know it himself. His ignorance was from lack of interest in his ancestry; ours is from lack of fullness in his biographies. The George Washington of the books is wholly of English stock.

And yet, delvers into the old records know better. They know something anyway of a certain elusive and attractive French grandsire, who made no small figure in our Colonial beginnings, and then was lost sight of in a strange way.

It was the man's French name that was his historical undoing. Those English-pointed quills of the Virginia scribes stumbled over it in so many different ways that it seemed to stand for half a dozen men. Later, confused writers added another man by mistakenly bringing in a Walloon name. But, in fact, all those men were a single proud, fiery Frenchman—forefather, and indeed first American forefather, of George Washington.

Yet more. So amazingly did events of his life reach forward, as though blazing a trail for one to come, that he seems the foreshadowing ancestral spirit of his famous descendant.

Now, let us get the old records to tell a straighter and fuller story of this picturesque early Virginian, and of George Washington's overlooked descent from a gentleman of France.

We have a way of regarding the year 1620 as marking the memorable voyage of the Mayflower—but it marks other things. In the English springtime of that year, months before the sailing of the Mayflower, another little vessel tacked out of the Downes and put to sea. Prow turned boldly westward, she set forth upon what was still the great adventure—"voyaging to the New World."

By now, it was known to all men that England had one small colony planted over there, in the vast stretch of wilderness, Virginia. Just a handful of men desperately clinging to the bank of a great tawny river such as "did never the eye of man behold."

For that colony the little Francis Bona Venture was sailing. Rather conspicuous perhaps among her English passengers was a certain young Frenchman, though he was a man who had lived for some time in England—Nicolas Marteau, gentleman.

The very times made a striking figure of him there on the crowded deck of the little ship. Twenty-nine years old; dark-eyed and fiercely mustachioed, of course; doublet and slashed trousers and high, shiny boots; romantic dash added by cocked and plumed sombrero, swinging cloak, and low-hung sword.

That voyage stretched on through the long summer. At last, the American coast; with a yawning gap in it—Chesapeake bay. Entering this, the Francis Bona Venture sailed straight across and into the mouth of a miles-wide river. Powhatan, the Indians called it; James river, said the English.

So came Nicolas Marteau, French forefather of George Washington, while yet not one of his English forefathers was in the New World.

Now the ship laid course for a flat point on the northern bank of the river, where the trees seemed growing out of the water. But high land was there, too, and a wide cultivated clearing. A few crude houses stood down by the water's edge, and two little stockade forts. This was the first to be reached of the string of tiny settlements; the hail-and-farewell port of all that there was of Anglo-Saxon America.

The place did not like its name, adopted from the Indians, Kecoughtan. In fact, the ship just entering the harbor was bringing a new one. From now, this handful of settlers' homes was Elizabeth City.

Brief stop here for the Francis Bona Venture. Ships were not allowed to break bulk until they reached the little capital of the colony, some 40 miles above. Forty miles of wide, brown, watery waste rolling between dark primeval forests. At length, as the ship rounded a sweeping bend, she came upon an island lying along the northern bank. A poor sort of village showed at the far end of it—Jamestown, the capital of Virginia.

So here was the end of the voyage. Here in a desolate wilderness, with a notch gouged out for a rude church and a stockade and a score of little houses to set in. True, Jamestown was quite a metropolis in comparison with the settlement down at the mouth of the river. But the young Frenchman turned back, and cast his lot with the newly-named Elizabeth City. He prospered, and acquired considerable land and two houses there. Soon came opportunity to play larger part.

For long the colony had been at peace with the Indians. The settlers were lulled to careless ease. Red men came and went at will among their "white brothers." Peacefully blossomed the springtime of 1622. Even "ye rangers of ye forest" sensed no lurking ill in that world of tender budding green, a soft pink haze in the Judas-trees.

Suddenly, unspeakable horror! When the swift red onslaught was over, an appalling number of the colonists were dead. But even so well planned a massacre wholly failed at certain points, including Elizabeth City. Among fugitive survivors brought here were a certain Lieutenant Berkeley and his wife, Jane. Young Marteau, busy in his work among the refugees, might have been more interested in Jane if he could have known that after a while she was to be his wife.

The savages well punished, the captain returned, a rising citizen, to Elizabeth City. In 1623 he was chosen one of its burgesses to the General Assembly, the little colonial legislature at Jamestown.

It is doubtless on a mid-February day that we find him sailing up the river to attend the Assembly. It was a different Jamestown now from that Captain Marteau had seen before. The crudity of the village lost in a sudden display of life and color. Governor, councilors and burgesses made brave showing as they moved toward the rude church, which was their meeting place. Lawmakers of the wilderness, in London array. Silk-slashed doublets, plush breeches, scarlet-lined cloaks; flashes of gilded sword-belts and brilliant plumes.

The Assembly convened with the governor in his great velvet chair, the councilors on either side, and the burgesses facing them. Much rattle of swords and clink of spurs, and then this body proceeded to become memorable. Memorable for sudden bold assertion of political rights. Sitting there under a governor commissioned in England, those colonials enacted that he could not, except with their consent, lay any form of taxes in Virginia. And the voice of George Washington's French grandfather was in that first American pronouncement that only through representation shall there be taxation.

Next, a yet bolder step. By this time, even the Virginians knew that King James was planning to destroy the great London Company which had established and maintained the colony. His purpose was to annul the company's charter, and govern Virginia from the throne. The colonists did not want that. They feared for their liberties. One day, during this session of the Assembly, an imposing English ship came tacking around the great bend in the river, and on to anchorage in front of Jamestown. The ship sent a boat ashore, and from it stepped out on the sand four impressive personages, "commissioners of the crown." They were come ostensibly to examine into the state of the colony; really, to find some pretext for what the king was about to do.

All was revealed when the royal commissioners laid before the Assembly a declaration, prepared for their signatures, favoring the annulment of the company's charter. One of the hard moments in our beginning days. A little colonial legislature in the wilderness measuring the spirit of liberty against the call of the king. The Assembly did not sign. Instead, it ignored the royal envoys, refused them copies of its proceedings, and addressed a protest directly to James I. A long and somewhat audacious protest, of seven papers. And, upon each of those seven papers, now historic documents in the British archives, the bold black signature of George Washington's colonial French ancestor. He was beginning early to lay out work for his distinguished descendant.

Now, the close of the Assembly. Plumed members following be-gilded governor out of the little church. And some years were to pass before there should be seen another such procession. For the king had his way. The London Company was overthrown. The Assembly was no more. Burgess Marteau, but an empty name. Though James I was soon succeeded by Charles I, Virginia continued for a while without voice in her own affairs.

But the rise of Captain Marteau went on. By 1626, Elizabeth City had become more important, and courts were established there.

The justices, called at first "commissioners," were appointed by the governor. The very appointment meant distinction. Now, when Captain Marteau was named, the seal was set upon his standing in the colony. The governor, and behind him the "best families" had spoken. George Washington's French forefather was coming on—and still not an English forefather in the New World.

By now it seemed that Virginia had given this alien-blooded son about all it could, except a wife. The spring of 1627 saw the death of that Lieutenant Berkeley who, with his wife Jane, had found refuge in Elizabeth City after the massacre.

In that same spring, Mrs. Berkeley became Mrs. Marteau.

English home, English honors, an English wife; but Nicolas Marteau's soul was French. Though his every act was loyal to his new country, his tongue sometimes forgot that it was naturalized. It did that one day when he and two or three companions were in a small boat out upon the river. Talk turned to the sore subject of the title of the king. Though, for over a century and a half, the English kings had done nothing to enforce their ancient claim to the crown of France, yet still their title declared them sovereigns of "England, Scotland, France and Ireland." That made the trouble out there in the boat. And it carried even so important a man as Marteau—captain, burgess, justice—before the high court of the colony.

Two or three years of that; then Kiskyack was divided and the Marteau plantation fell in the newly-made borough of York. But the captain, as usual, only went from honor to honor. The governor appointed him one of the justices of York. That was to be his permanent office in the colony. As Justice of York he was to go on holding court to the end of his days.

By 1635, Captain Marteau had become important enough to be a rebel. He was a leader in America's first uprising against

ONE of the most picturesque figures in modern exploration, General Candido Mariano da Silva Rondon, Brazil's great military engineer and heroic frontiersman, has just added another feat to his long list of accomplishments.

At the head of a small party of scientists he has discovered a vast plateau of dense forests and rolling grassy lands in a hitherto unexplored section of Brazil, three hundred miles north of the Amazon, near the border of Dutch Guiana. During his expedition he came upon a new tribe of Indians. At present he is surveying potential routes for a road to connect this new territory with the Amazonian town of Obidos.

Few newspaper readers outside of Brazil realize, as they read of General Rondon's latest exploits, what an extraordinary career this sixty-two-year-old veteran of the jungle has behind him.

A waif of the wilderness who by dint of an unconquerable will achieved a splendid technical education and became professor of mathematics in the Military Academy at Rio, Rondon laid aside his academic honors almost as soon as he had won them and—this was thirty-nine years ago—dropped his geometry textbooks to shoulder a rifle and theodolite and return to the jungles from which he had sprung.

Since that time, besides having been the man who really made possible Roosevelt's famous trip down the River of Doubt, General Rondon is credited with having opened up to civilization the greatest area of mystery ever conquered by the efforts of a single individual.

That area is now called Rondonia by the Brazilians in his honor. It is roughly a fan-shaped section of the map, bigger than all our North Atlantic states. It spreads out northwestward from Goyaz toward the Amazon and Madeira rivers.

In the brief space of three decades General Rondon has built approximately 4,500 miles of commercial and military telegraph line through this hostile wilderness, he has hacked out an uncounted mileage of roads and trails, he has prepared the only reliable maps, he has begun to civilize the wild tribes of Indians and has built schools for them, he has laid the foundations for a flourishing inland empire that some day will be the most productive of all Brazil's rich area.

In the wake of Rondon's pioneer footsteps cattle ranches have sprung up, farms have been hewn from the jungle, villages have taken root, and the mining, diamond, rubber and nut-gathering industries have spread. Meanwhile, General Rondon's discoveries of the fascinating flora and faula of the region, the primitive Indian culture, the natural resources and meteorogical conditions have barely been cataloged by science, although he himself has written fifty books about them and has filled the National Museum in Rio de Janeiro with collections of extraordinary interest.

Of this whole mass of Rondon's accomplishments, including the almost superhuman construction of thousands of miles of strategic telegraph line through virgin jungle remote from civilization, Theodore Roosevelt once said that in magnitude of enterprise it "could be compared only to the opening of the Panama Canal."

Rondon has earned the high honor of the medal of the Explorers Club of New York, which less than a dozen individuals have ever attained. For his patriotic services General Rondon is idolized throughout Matto Grosso. In fact, he is probably the most popular Brazilian of this era.

He is a short, wiry figure with an erect, military bearing—a tense bundle of nerves and steely sinews and fiery pride. His high forehead and prominent cheeks are deeply bronzed from a life of ceaseless exposure. I have seen his astride his horse at a military review in as majestic and statuesque a pose as any sculptor could wish. I have seen him a few hours later riding wild over rough country, galloping recklessly through groves of trees, leaping ditches, pressing his mount up precipitous slopes, in pursuit of hunting dogs and their quarry. At such moments he suggests a harum-scarum youngster.

As the official overlord of Brazil's Indian population. I have seen him sit in solemn state and lay down the law between two tribes of Indians; and then, as the trial was over, I have seen him unbend and play games in the dust with naked Indian children. For he loves the Indians above all else.

When I first met him in Rio, seeking information that would help me in my prospective trip among the Carajas, his face lit up with enthusiasm at the mention of the word "Indians." He gave me letters of introduction that were an open sesame through Matto Grosso, and information without which my trip could not possibly have succeeded.

His pacification of the Indian tribes is the work in which he takes greatest pride, but undoubtedly General Rondon's economic and historical points of view, was the construction of the famous telegraph line beyond Goyaz through more than 1,000 miles of utterly unknown jungle to the Madeira river and Brazil's northwestern frontier. By this feat, which took eight years of the most arduous battle with the wilderness, he bound together into a cohesive whole the far-flung outposts of the Brazilian nation. Previously, the frontier towns, ranches, garrisons and rubber centers had been hopelessly isolated. They could not communicate with the flourishing cities of the Atlantic Coast except by journeys down the Amazon or Parana and Paraguay rivers, which took weeks or even months to accomplish.

This was not only a serious obstacle to Brazil's economic progress; it left the country in a perilous military situation. Indian and bandit raids were frequent and there was always the possibility of some frontier clash, like the recent Bolivia-Paraguay outburst, which might end disastrously before the government in Rio ever heard of it.

Now remote centers may get into instant touch with the capital. And the roads he has built through the jungle afford overland transportation between the interior and the rail heads. Supplies can be taken up directly to the ranches, and the cattle can be driven out with comparative ease to the rail head, where they are refattened before shipment.

Indeed, General Rondon has furnished South America's largest country with a nervous system of wires and transport routes, and converted its hinterland from a sprawling agglomeration of isolated communities into an organic whole.

An incident from one of his preliminary survey trips toward the Madeira river, before actual construction of the telegraph line had been begun, reveals the sort of man and leader that General Rondon is. It was just twenty years ago this spring that he and his small military party were hacking their way through the jungle where the wires later were to be strung. They had gone 400 miles from Diamantina in two months. Their supplies had long since given out and their pack train had melted away. There was little game, and no time to hunt for it. Rondon's men were suffering from fever. Their bodies were covered with festering sores from the bites of mosquitoes, poisonous ants and boroshudas. Their clothes were in tatters, their boots worn through. For weeks they had been living upon wild honey, palm tops, nuts and even grubs.

At last they reached a river which they identified as the Gy-Parana. The doctor with the expedition insisted that the trip should be abandoned. Rondon refused to listen. Ten of his men, who were too weak to walk further, he sent down the river. Rondon struggled on with the rest. By the time they reached the next river Rondon himself was shaking with jungle fever. Again the doctor insisted that the commanding officer give up the trip. Colonel Rondon turned to his bugler and ordered him to sound the assembly call. All of his men who were able to stand on their feet at attention he ordered to go forward with him. Those too feeble to stand on their feet at attention were sent down stream in a canoe.

Half insane with fever and rebellious, they refused to attempt the river crossing. Rondon killed their last ox and fashioned a crude canoe from its hide. Placing the weakest of the men aboard he swam the river repeatedly, guiding the flimsy makeshift craft across. The others, inspired by his courage, followed. On the next day, although his fever was high, he led his men twenty-four miles through virgin jungle.

Two weeks later a dozen men, with Rondon at their head, staggered into a rubber camp on the banks of the Madeira. They were almost naked by this time, their bodies lacerated by brambles and sharp-edged palm leaves, their knees so weak from famine they could scarcely stand. But they had made their maps and surveys and accomplished their purpose in full. General Rondon had reached the Madeira river across an almost impenetrable wilderness which five previous expeditions had failed to conquer.

Thus merciless to himself is General Rondon. He shows the Spartan disregard for physical suffering that characterizes the Bororo Indians, whose blood flows in his veins. Recent dispatches have described him as a pure-blooded Indian. This is incorrect. On his father's side he is descended from those early "bandeirantes" of the eighteenth century who, like America's forty-niners, first fought their way heroically into the wilderness in search of gold. Thus his inheritance, both Indian and Portuguese, is one of iron courage in the face of nature's most savage opposition.

As a matter of fact, General Rondon may be likened most closely to our own Danial Boone. His services in pushing far beyond the frontier, in meeting and taming savage tribes, in opening up the wilderness, have been parallel to those of the great North American frontiersman. His amazing knowledge of woodcraft, his scouting and stalking skill, his hunting prowess and accuracy in shooting are similar. There are even parallels in the early days of the two men, for just as Daniel Boone was reared on the very edge of the wilderness, learning to hunt almost as soon as he could talk, so was Rondon raised in the bush beyond the last outposts of civilization.

His parents were moradoros, or small farmers, eking out a precarious existence on the Matto Grosso frontier. They died while he was still a baby and he was taken into the home of his uncle, Miguel Evangelista, who had a large ranch fifty miles from Cuyaba.

From the training, hardships and adventure of this early ranch life young Rondon gained the abilities that were to make him famous. By the time he was ten years old he was carrying on his share of the work. Mounted bareback and barefoot on a horse of uncertain temperament he joined in the round-ups of wild cattle. He spent weeks with the cowboys, scouring the plains for yearlings to be branded. He soen earned an enviable reputation as a hunter of the jaguars which preyed on the cattle and of the wild pigs which ravaged the grain fields.

The youth became a dead shot, a stalker as wily as any Indian and an expert swimmer in the swiftest rivers. He became hardened to sleeping on the ground, to enduring the assaults of poisonous insects, to riding or tramping tirelessly all day under overpowering sun or drenching rain.

Thus, before his schooling began, young Rondon had become an accomplished woodsman and explorer. He had also developed an intense interest in the Indians. At that time the Bororos were raiding the isolated ranches and outpost villages. The majority of the settlers hated the Indians, thinking of them as savage animals that ought to be exterminated. But young Rondon felt a blood sympathy for the natives and came to believe that the enmity between them and the white settlers could be overcome, not through warfare, but through peaceful, educational efforts.

Soon he saw this as his life work. He wanted to civilize and preserve Brazil's fascinating indigenous population rather than exterminate it. But he realized that he must first educate himself.

He went to school in Cuyaba, where in a few years he won a scholarship in the Military Academy at Rio de Janeiro, entering there when he was sixteen. For a time he forgot the wilderness and became an assiduous student. While at the Military Academy he took part in the demonstrations of 1889, when Brazil was proclaimed a republic. After being graduated he taught mathematics in the academy for two years, but soon he again felt the early call to action.

He was already known as the best "sertanista"—or frontiersman—who had ever been graduated from the Military Academy. Marshal Floriano Peixotto, proclaimer of the republic, agreed with young Rondon that his talents were being wasted in Rio and sent him up into Matto Grosso to help organize the roads and telegraphic communications around Goyaz and Cuyaba.

This was in 1893, and for the next fourteen years young Rondon, rapidly advancing in military rank, commanded gangs of men in the wilderness, making roads and stringing wires by which the remote frontier communities were linked together. The work was so arduous and dangerous that it was necessary to pay six or seven times the ordinary wages to get laborers, and often even this premium failed and Rondon had to use convicts in his gangs—hardened criminals whom any less powerful personality would not have been able to manage.

During these years many of his men perished from accidents and illness, but the work went on. Feber, beriberi and poisonous snakes decimated his workers. He himself at times was ill to the point of death. He saw one of his men eaten by an alligator; many were drowned in the river rapids.

On one occasion, he plunged into a river to rescue a lieutenant who had been assailed by piranha fish. He was immediately attacked himself. After a struggle he succeeded in reaching shore, but his thighs and arms were so lacerated that he was confined to a hammock for six months. But he insisted on retaining command, and he was carried in his hammock while he relentlessly pushed through the survey upon which he was engaged.

Throughout his career General Rondon has called upon his men for the most stoical endurance of hardships, but he has won their support by pressing himself harder than any of them. While building the Corumba-Cuyaba line, from 1900 to 1904, he worked for days on end in malarial swamps, often being so weak with fever that he could hardly talk.

By the time he was forty he had crisscrossed the frontier beyond Goyaz with thousands of miles of jungle trails and telegraph lines, had surveyed and mapped 50,000 square miles of wilderness filled with tremendous natural resources and had pacified several previously hostile tribes of Indians.

Then, in 1907, he was commissioned to undertake the greatest enterprise of his career—the construction of the military telegraph to Juruena and the Madeira river. To drive this line for more than 1,000 miles through the most inhospitable wilderness in Brazil, in the face of opposition from the savages, was the task of which Theodore Roosevelt said: "Never have I seen nor do I know of comparable work. Men who can do this are of our greatest, and people with such sons can never be defeated."

The Indians were a constant menace. General Rondon, knowing their languages and their customs, approached their villages with elaborate ceremony, and seemed to his followers unduly obsequious before the Indian chiefs. But had Rondon been lass ingratiating, his forces might never have returned.

The party was occasionally ambushed. Surveyors, linemen and laborers would fall, struck by poisoned arrows. When the expedition of 1907 neared the Juruena river the first Nhambiquaras were encountered. This tribe hitherto had been considered largely mythical. Rondon verified the fact that the Nhambiquaras existed and were the most primitive people on either American continent. These primitive people at first offered a shifty, skirmishing resistance, then finally made a full stand and turned back the invading whites with a storm of arrows. General Rondon was struck by one of the first arrows. Fortunately his belt turned it aside. He picked it up, forbade his men to fire in reply and led them in a hasty retreat. That arrow now is in the Museum at Rio.

Rondon's strategy on this occasion was typical of him. Had he attempted to fight the Indians he might have won, but at the cost of an undying hatred for all whites. The next year he returned with lavish gifts, and by a policy of peaceful penetration finally became an object of the Indians' veneration.

These Nhambiquaras are authentically a stone age people, living naked in flimsy shelters, using very few tools, of rough stone, and being nomadic in their habits. General Rondon finally succeeded in striking up a fairly friendly relationship with them, secured motion picture films of their dances and brought back to Rio a great deal of immensely interesting ethnological data about them.

Rondon's career has brought him great wealth and fame. He could now settle down in his magnificent home in Rio, to enjoy the fruits of a life of almost unprecedented adventure. But his heart is not in the cities. I have talked with him in his office in Rio, amid a wonderfully fascinating collection of Indian culture, head-dresses, ornaments, weapons, utensils, paddies and photographs in bewildering quantity. But he is not at ease in an office. His eyes brighten with a fiery interest at the word Indian, and as you talk with him you perceive that his spirit is again back among the dusky savages of the jungle.

And that is why General Rondon, despite the arduous career behind him, and despite the fact that he has already opened up to civilization a region constituting nearly a fifth of Brazil's total area, has again taken upon his sturdy shoulders, unbowed by sixty-two years of strenuous life, the responsibility for a new expedition into an uncharted country as mysterious as any he has yet conquered.

INSTALLMENT III.

A SUDDEN jarring told us a tire was punctured, and, before we could come to a standstill, two more had met the same fate.

This was, of course, out of reason, unless the man we were chasing had strewn something sharp in our way. So he had done. One of his barbs or snags is before me now—a four-spiked horror of steel, which, however idly you throw it, will always stand upon three spikes and thrust the fourth into the air. Such things were once used in warfare to lame the enemy's horse, and I afterwards found that in the Reichtenburg army they were field service stores.

We had two spare wheels, and, as luck would have it, a tube, so half an hour's hard labor would make the car fit for the road, but I fear we were out of temper with all the world, and, when the duke protested that we should "get on to Vigil and let the —— tires go," I ignored the suggestion and Hanbury answered curtly that, even if it had not been ours, we should never so abuse such a car.

With that we took off our coats and got to work, and the duke flounced back on his seat and closed his eyes.

The grand duchess was down by my side.

"What can I do?" she said.

With the back of my hand I wiped the sweat from my brow. Then I took up one of the snags that had punctured our tires.

"If you will walk back," said I, "and look for some more things like this. I don't know how many he dropped, but it's hardly likely he got us the first go off."

Before I had finished she was gone and was searching the road.

By the time the car was ready she had not returned; we, therefore, turned the car round with infinite care and started to go very slowly the way we had come.

Before we had gone half a mile the road bent sharply to the right and then split into two, and, though George without hesitation swung to the left, I was by no means certain that that was our way. What was more to the point, it very soon became clear that, rightly or wrongly, the grand duchess had taken the other road, and, since she had to be found before we did anything else, we went about again and essayed the right hand road.

Almost at once we found her, but, when George asked her if this was the way we had come she said that, now that she had seen it, she was not sure and added that, for what it was worth, she had found no snags.

I do not know what to think, and, though George was now less certain that he had been right, we had just decided to return once more to the fork when the duke indicated a rill which leaped from between two rocks, as though from a mouth, and then fell into a trough which was cut from the trunk of a tree. This he declared he remembered, and, since that was very much more than any ane else could say, we considered the matter settled and drove ahead.

And that was the beginning of trouble; for, when, after twenty minutes, we had proved his memory faithless and sought to return to the fork, we could by no means find it, and with every movement seemed to stray only farther afield.

The country was very blind and the roads rose and fell and twisted as though bewitched: there were no sign posts to help us, and when we looked for the map it was not to be found.

After an hour of wandering George brought the car to rest by the side of the road.

"What the hell's the matter now?" said the duke.

George spoke over his shoulder.

"For one thing," he said, "I'm tired. I've stopped and started and turned and backed till I can't feel the clutch. Add to that that I've changed two wheels and permanently injured my brain trying to find the way which you insisted you knew." He sighed there and I began to shake with laughter. "Well, that's one reason. If you want another, we've only half a gallon of petrol left. We had ample to get to Vigil, but I meant to fill up at the frontier—just in case. But that was before the mixup. I don't want to point any fingers and I'm perfectly ready to bear my share of the blame. I've been driving, and the dial's right under my nose. But it's all this mucking about that's run us dry."

There was an uneasy silence.

Then—

"How far," asked the duke, "will half a gallon get us?"

George raised his eyebrows.

"In this going, employed with care, about five miles."

With that he turned to me and demanded a cigaret.

* * * *

I had walked three miles across country and seen neither man nor beast nor any sort of building but a cottage that had been burned down, when I came to the edge of a bluff, to see, far below me, fair meadows and in their midst an abbey with its attendant farm.

The scene made as pretty a picture as ever I saw, for the sun was setting and the valley was full of red light. A stream flowed through the meadows, and cattle were slaking their thrist on their way by a ford: the water was running golden, and everything, great and little, was throwing its cleancut shadow upon the turf. Smoke was rising from the buildings, but I saw neither monks nor nuns, and the view of a ruinous cloister suggested that the place was no longer a covert of holy church. Still it was a decent homestead, at which, if need be, the grand duchess could pass the night; and that was what I was seeking, for, unless we could come by some petrol we could not go on, and before we set our face to the frontier, the servants had to be found.

A road ran out of the valley, and, so far as I was able, I marked the line that it took. Then I returned to the car and made my report.

"Can they give us petrol?" said the duke, sullenly.

"We'll know when we get there," said I.

He flung himself back on his seat and held his peace.

It was an anxious journey, for dusk was upon us and I had to guess the way, but after much disappointment, we ran down a long, steep hill and into the valley I sought.

We crossed the stream by a bridge of old gray stone and a moment later we saw the abbey ahead with the bluff on its left.

And there the engine fainted, for lack of fuel.

In spite of my walk George was more weary than I, for his rest had been broken the night before. I, therefore, alighted and started to walk to the farm, which lay a lady's mile distant at the end of the road.

The grand duchess lifted her voice.

"Where are you going?"

"For petrol," I answered. "And, if I can't have it, for horses to pull us in."

"I will go," she said shortly, stepping down into the road.

"Thank you," said I, "but it's nothing. Besides, you can't go alone."

"Then I will go with you," she said, "for the look of the thing."

We began to walk in silence towards the farm.

The grand duchess was speaking.

"Has Paul thanked you once for anything that you've done?"

"We don't want any thanks," said I. "And we haven't done much."

"I thank you," she said quietly.

I did not know what to reply and so said nothing, but walked along, like a fool, with my eyes on the ground. But the words had been gently spoken and I felt more than paid.

"If they can't give us petrol," she said, "what shall we do?"

"I shall ride to the nearest garage. Then I must find the servants, and then we'll drive to Vigil, if you're not too tired."

"This delay's unlucky," she said. "By keeping out of the picture Paul is playing directly into his cousin's hand You see, he should be on parade—especially now. The prince is dying and Paul is his rightful heir. There's no shadow of doubt about that. And every one will support him, provided he himself doesn't let them down. If he does, if he's not there at the moment for them to support, to sign proclamations and orders, to appear on the balcony—well, people are only human. If you've got a king you must play him or the other side will."

"But if," said I, "if he's the heir apparent——"

"Paul isn't popular," she said. "It isn't his fault—he was spoiled. Plenty of people believe that he doesn't value the throne. If he takes his place and claims it he'll have it, because it's his right. But, if he doesn't they'll throw up their hats for Johann. And that's why we must get to Vigil as soon as we possibly can."

"We'll do our utmost," I said. "I promise you that."

The grand duchess lifted her head and spoke to the sky.

"Paul's his worst enemy," she said, "and always was. Far worse than Johann. He's lost so many games, because he couldn't be bothered to play the right cards. But he—he mustn't throw this away."

I made no answer, but stepped along by her side well aware of her beauty and thankful to find her so friendly and frank of speech.

Presently she spoke of England and asked of the life we led. And I told her of Maintenance and Wiltshire and how we hunted all the winter and spent more hours in the open than under a roof.

"That's right," she said gravely. "That's the way we were meant to live. Up and down with the sun and three meals a day."

I walked clean into the trap.

"One breaks it sometimes," said I, "but it's a very good rule."

"I agree," said the grand duchess. And then: "I—I thought you never lunched."

I could feel her eyes upon me, but, when at last I looked round she was gazing into the distance with the faintest smile on her face.

"I—I have nothing to say," I stammered.

The grand duchess' smile deepened.

"No one," she said, "could accuse you of being changeable."

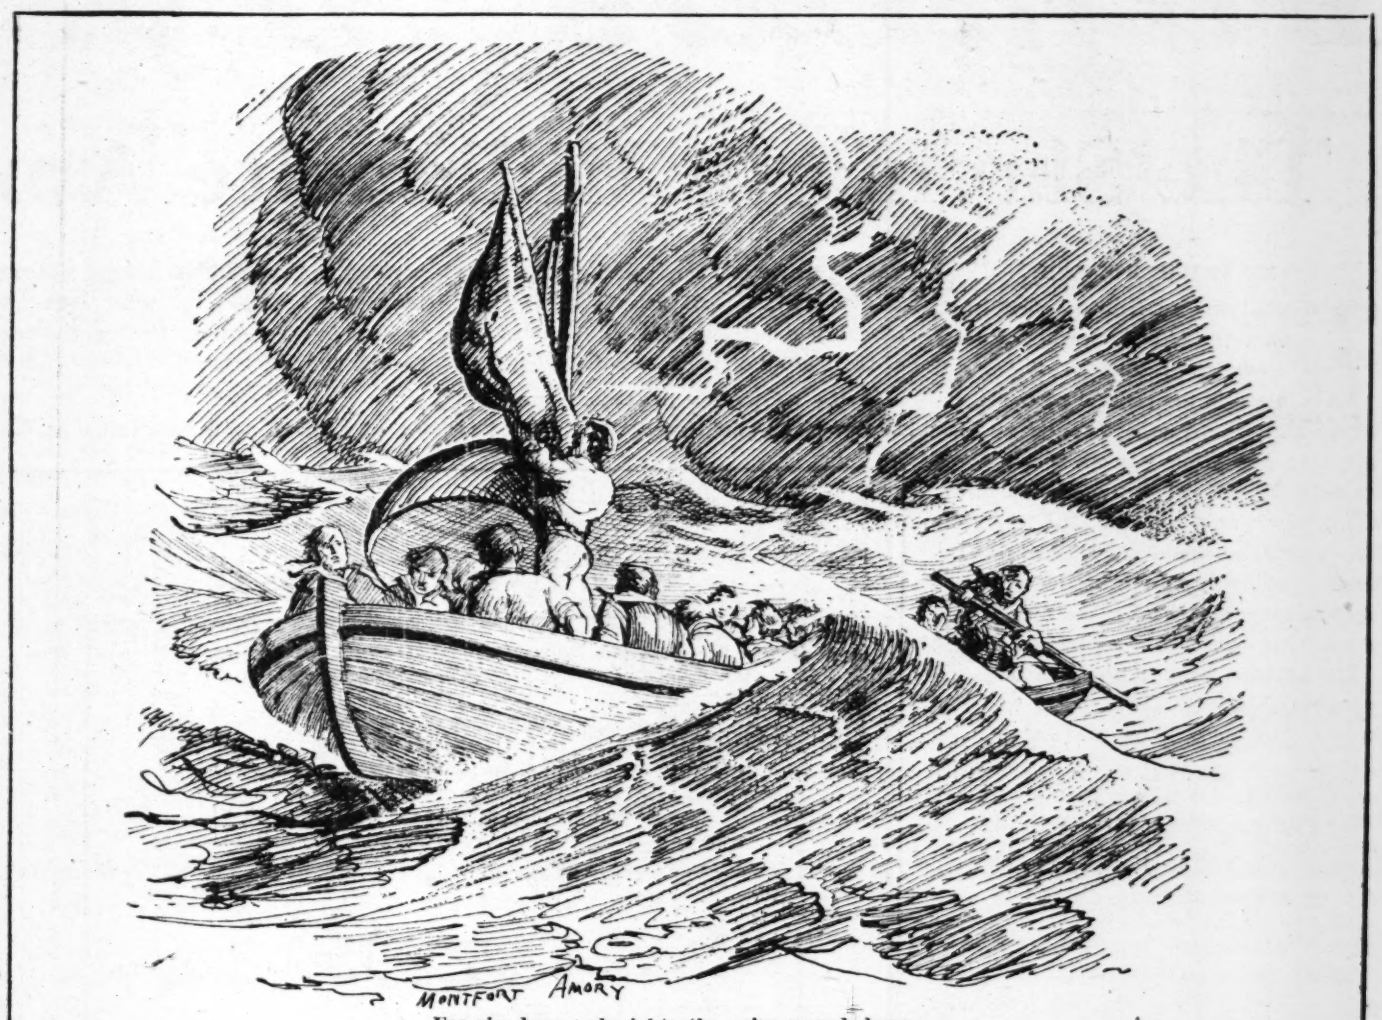

As we drew near the buildings I could see that the abbey had been built in the form of a square, but two sides of this were gone. What I had taken for the church was the refectory; this with the ancient kitchen still made one side of the square and ran at right angles to a mansion which made the other. I say "a mansion" for lack of a better word, but the face of it was not changed and it looked the private dwelling of some one of note. Along the refectory some twenty yards of cloister were well preserved, but, except for its bench and pavement, the rest was gone, though the mansion still bore the piers from which its arches had sprung.

No lights were burning in the house, the

Pirates Ahoy!

By Charles B. Driscoll

For six days and nights the rain poured down.

WHEN William Bligh was put off the Bounty into an open boat by his mutinous crew, he was at first merely mad. He vented his fury in shouted threats to have them all hanged when they got back to England.

But when the Bounty was hull down on the horizon, Lieutenant Bligh remembered that he was in the middle of a very large ocean, half way around the globe from England.

There were then eighteen men besides Bligh, in the boat, which was twenty-three feet long, undecked, and provided with a mast and a sail. Provisions consisted of one hundred and fifty pounds of bread, thirty-two pounds of pork, twenty-eight gallons of water, six quarts of rum and six bottles of wine. There were four cutlasses for defense.

The men were packed so closely into the boat that they had to sit in cramped positions, and could hardly find room for rowing. The boat was down in the water so far that the slightest wind sent waves over her gunwales.

Bligh was a resourceful individual, and so tough that no hardship frightened him. He ordered his men to start rowing. The little island of Tofoa was only forty miles away. They would stop there and take on some breadfruit and other fresh supplies, and then start for the Dutch island of Timor, almost four thousand miles away, stopping at every island for rest and supplies.

These plans were radically changed after the visit to Tofoa. Some cocoanuts were obtained there, but the natives put on a demonstration of their stone-throwing talents. They killed John Norton, the quartermaster, and wounded nearly everybody in the boat. They could throw stones very accurately, because they had had practically nothing else to do all their lives but practice stone-throwing.

Now there were eighteen men in all in the open boat, including Lieutenant Bligh. Most of them were suffering from bruises, but they were not very low in spirits when, on May 2, 1789, they set a course resolutely eastward, determined to land at no more islands inhabited solely by savages.

Next day a gale came howling across the limitless ocean—the first of many storms that these castaway mariners were destined to face in their long battle with the elements.

The salt water drenched all the occupants of the boat, and most of them got all the exercise they needed that day, bailing out the water. It was found necessary to throw overboard all but the most essential clothes, and all spare ropes and sails, in order to lighten the boat a little. The chief care of the adventurers was to keep their supply of bread from being spoiled by salt water.

Bligh's parsimony, which was constitutional and involuntary, now became the means of saving the hard-pressed little company. Under the leadership of any other man in the world, these unfortunate sailors must have perished. But Bligh knew how to parcel out food.

He found a musket ball which was known to weigh just one-twenty-fifth of a pound. The carpenter rigged a pair of simple balances. Into one plate was put the bit of lead. Into the other was placed just a large enough pinch of bread to make the scale balance. That was each man's portion of bread for a meal, and there were three meals a day. A teaspoonful of rum was also served to each person in the boat after a particularly hard night, or when the rain had drenched everybody to the skin and made each miserable sailor shiver when the sun went down.

Lieutenant Bligh announced that there would be no more landings until the party should reach Australia (then called New Holland). There, he said, they might land to stretch their legs a bit and pick up some food, if there were any to be had. Then, on to Timor, where there was a Dutch settlement somewhere. Australia was not yet safe for white men.

Bligh was a good navigator. He kept his course true in spite of storm and hardship and faintness from hunger.

For six days and nights the rain poured down, and the sun was hidden. The liberal supply of rainwater kept the crew from famishing, but it also gave everybody chills, rheumatic pains, and fits of depression. A good cup of hot tea would have been quite welcome in the circumstances.

Bligh ordered all the men to strip, wring out their clothes in the seawater, and dress themselves again. The sea-water was warmer than the descending torrents, and the men praised their commander for this ingenious device for warding off chills.

When the sea was not running too high, half of the occupants were made to lie down while the others sat up. This arrangement provided for some little rest for the exhausted mariners.

Passing some small islands, the castaways were chased by boatloads of natives, but managed to outdistance the clumsy boats of their pursuers.

Lieutenant Bligh kept a log of the voyage of the Bounty's boat. Much of the time his hands were almost too sore and stiff to grasp a pencil, but he managed to make entries nearly every day. This log has been preserved, and is one of the greatest curiosities of marine literature. It tells a day-by-day story that would wring tears from the hardest cynic, even one hundred and forty years after it was written.

On Sunday, the 17th of May, nineteen days after the little party had been put off the Bounty by the mutineers who had taken charge of the ship, Lieutenant Bligh makes this entry:

"At dawn of day I found every person complaining, and some of them solicited extra allowance, which I positively refused."

Good old Bligh! Now, at last, his notorious stinginess had become a virtue. He absolutely revelled in the opportunity to refuse food to hungry men, and here was his golden opportunity.

Again: "Being miserably wet and cold, I served to the people a teaspoonful of rum each, to enable them to bear their distressed condition."

Bligh was a great disciplinarian, and he needed all his talents in this situation. The men were afraid of him, and besides, they were sensible enough to know that only by obedience and resignation could they hope to battle through.

An ounce and a half of pork was allowed to each man daily as long as the pork lasted. A fish was caught on an improvised hook, but it got away, causing more disappointment in that boat than a lost election causes in a hopeful political party.

When a sea-bird was caught, Bligh had it cut up into eighteen pieces, and divided out among the unfortunates by a system of blind choosing. The twenty-fifth part of a pound of bread was a regular standby. That was the regulation ration. If a teaspoonful of rum was added, or a sip of wine, or an ounce of salt pork there was wild rejoicing. At sea in an open boat, with a cold rain falling and the nearest land a thousand heartches distant, one doesn't wait for the gift of a new automobile for rejoicing. A pinch of salt pork will do as well.

One night Lieutenant Bligh was moved to great liberality, and this is how he records it in his log:

"The sea flew over us with great force, and kept us bailing with horror and anxiety. At dawn of day I found everyone in a most distressed condition, and I began to fear that another such night would put an end to the lives of several, who seemed no longer able to support their sufferings. I served an allowance of TWO teaspoonfuls of rum, after drinking which, and having wrung our clothes and taken our breakfast of bread and water, we became a little refreshed."

The bread allowance was cut down a third when the boat had been at sea nearly a month, and Bligh was afraid this discipline might raise a new mutiny, but the men were too weak to object. The lieutenant taught the men how to make a banquet out of their little allowance of bread. He broke his little crust up into small crumbs, and ate them slowly with a spoon, out of a cocoanut shell, taking as long to the meal as he would have taken had he been dining out with friends in London.

On the twenty-eighth of May, exactly one month after the mutiny on the Bounty that set the launch adrift, the party reached the Australian coast. The castaways landed on a bleak and deserted coast, and ate their usual dinner of a bread crumb or two and a half a coffee cup of water. Bligh made a fire with his magnifying glass, and some oysters that were found clinging to the rocks were cooked and served all around. This was the first hot food the mariners had had in a month. They rejoiced over it as one might celebrate over a meal of breast of pheasant and fresh cavair after a day's fast.

For two days the feasting went on, but Bligh stopped the consumption of the precious bread supply, for there was a long way to go yet, and Australia was an unexplored country, more dangerous to castaways than the open sea.

Bligh got his seventeen companions, much refreshed, into the boat again, and the voyage to Timor continued. They landed on the little island after a day or two, and the company was so far refreshed that one of the huskiest of the sailors told Blight to mind how he talked, as he, the sailor, was as good a man as the lieutenant. Bligh was going to kill the sailor for this, but the poor fellow begged off, and was allowed to live on condition that he should remember his discipline in future.

Six days were spent sailing and rowing the Australian coast, and then the expedition turned again to the open sea, making toward Timor. On July 10th the condition of some of the men was so bad that Bligh again feared some deaths would occur, but on the fourteenth, forty-eight days after being cast adrift, the eighteen starving men made Coupang Bay, Island of Timor, where they were hospitably received by the Dutch inhabitants.

The voyage had covered just about four thousand miles, as we measure miles on land. I do not know of any more heroic voyage in an open boat, attended by greater hardships for so many men.

It had all been accomplished with the loss of only one man—Norton, who had been killed by savages at the beginning of the voyage. Bligh had shown himself a masterly navigator and an able manager of men.

The crew spent two months at Coupang, recuperating. Bligh then bought a small schooner and took his company on to Batavia, where various arrangements were made for transporting most of the heroes of the long voyage back to England. One man died in Coupang of illness contracted during the voyage. Two died in Batavia. One seaman over-ate as soon as he got hold of fresh meat, and died on shipboard. The surgeon of the Bounty, who was one of the weakest passengers in the open boat, stayed in Java, and was never again heard of.

Twelve of the adventurous voyagers eventually reached England. Lieutenant Bligh immediately began efforts to have an expedition sent out by the navy to find and apprehend the mutineers of the Bounty, who had set him and his men adrift in an open boat so far from home.

The Slaying of Millionaire Amos J. Snell I

BY PHILIP KINSLEY

THE Snell case takes first rank among Chicago's earlier murder mysteries. Echoes of it are still heard in the police department, although all the chief actors have passed from the stage, and Willie Tascott, the supposed murderer of the old west side millionaire, has become almost a myth. The search for him, at one time world-wide, has been abandoned, and he may be living today in one of Chicago's shabby genteel boarding houses, a quiet old man with a mysterious income.

The evidence against him was only circumstantial, after all, and there has long been a suspicion that the hue and cry over him was a cover under which others escaped. There is not a hint, however, in all the available evidence, as to the identity of any other person involved in this desperate crime. It had political consequences in the fall of a chief of police and led to more than 400 arrests in different parts of the world.

Amos J. Snell was a rich man as fortunes went in 1888, when he was shot and killed one cold winter night in his mansion at Washington boulevard and Ada street. He was said to be worth three or four millions, all amassed in shrewd real estate deals and flinty bargains in mortgages. He was the stern, rather puritanical head of a household which included an ailing wife, three married daughters, a son, and grandchildren.

One of his daughters is the much married Mrs. Grace Snell-Coffin-Walker-Layman-Love, etc. She rebelled against the patriarchal rule when she was 16, ran away and married a coachman, was finally forgiven and taken back home. Two of her children were sleeping on the third floor of the big house on the night of February 7, 1883, when Snell was killed.

What happened that night is explained partly by the character of Snell. He was a fearless man and had much to defend, but he took little precaution for his life.

He was 65 years old, stood over six feet in his stockings, and weighed more than 200 pounds. A farm boy from New England, he had married young and come west to find his fortune. From a roadside inn in Schaumberg, Cook county, he became proprietor of a hotel and grocery in Jefferson. Always buying land, dealing in timber for the railroads, gathering in farms and homes thriftily, in 1868, when he moved to Chicago, he had half a million dollars.

He hired an architect and ordered a fine home built. It was on the northwest corner of Ada street and the old Washington boulevard, which in those days was a center of wealth and fashion. He filled his home with fine furniture, marble statuary, rugs, and ornaments. He transacted much of his business himself in a basement office, where he kept a safe, but rarely locked it, for his money was distributed among three banks.

The old house is gone now, swept away to make room for the new boulevard, the swift cars that seldom linger in a district given over to factories and decaying rooming houses. A few of the old brownstone fronts are still standing, but strangers live there. The massive iron fences are gone and there is no seclusion and quiet. We are dealing with a past age, the days when women wore bustles, when Cleveland was president, Oglesby governor, Roche mayor; when John L. Sullivan was in the ring, and Lily Langtry and Clara Morris on the stage. There were no fast cars and few telephones. The lack of house and police telephones may have had something to do with the escape of the murder or murderers that night.

Among old Snell's possessions was the famous plank road, a toll road that led to Jefferson and Milwaukee. He owned 400 houses and permitted his son-in-law, Albert J. Stone, to collect rents on the north and west sides. It might easily be supposed that such a man would have large sums of money in his house and that it would be a rich crib to crack.

Chicago was much troubled with burglars that winter. Many tough men were in town, hanging around West Madison street and the red light district nearby. Citizens complained bitterly against the police department efficiency and the reply has a familiar ring—there were not enough men on the force. There was no real homicide department. The Bertillon system nad been introduced in Joliet two years before, but was not in general use. Fingerprints might have solved that mystery.

Snell's movements the day before his death indicate a brooding premonition of evil. He spent a good part of the afternoon in Brandel's saloon and restaurant at Ada and Randolph. This was a respectable old place and Snell was a friend of the proprietor and his wife. He told Mrs. Brandel that she and a friend of hers could take his sleigh and go for a ride. It was zero weather, with much snow on the ground. Sitting in the saloon, he recalled a burglary in his old home on the plank road in 1867. He had surprised and captured the burglars and had seen them go to Joliet. One of them had threatened to kill him. Snell wondered if the men were out, and seemed to be troubled on this afternoon. Was this a vague stirring of mental tentacles that sometimes reach into the future with uncanny sight, or did he have a definite warning?

He went home about 10 o'clock that evening. As it developed subsequently, there were two men in his house that evening. Whether he saw them or not is not recorded. They were friends of Rosa Berkstaller, the cook. Ida Berenstone, the maid, was also there, and the coachman, Henry Winkelhof, was in and around the house and stables, where he lived. Snell had found the men there before, visiting his cook, and threatened to kick them out if they came again. One of the men wanted $10 and Rosa went to her master and borrowed it. The supposition is that the men were hidden from him and sneaked out. They were found later by the police and released after an investigation. There was never any suspicion as to any of the old servants.

Snell went up to the second floor to bed. His wife was in Milwaukee, ill with heart disease, and he was alone on this floor. He put on a flannel nightgown and wrapped around his throat one of the socks that he took off, as a valuable remedy against sore throat. He put his gun under his pillow, found the house all quiet, and went to bed.

There was a ball across the street that evening in Martine's hall and the street was alive with carriages coming and going and the shouts of the drivers. The weather reports show it was a clear night, four below zero. There had been a fresh fall of snow.

About 2 o'clock in the morning the servants and children on the upper floor were awakened by shouts and shots. They did not dare go below. One of them reported later that she heard Snell cry: "Get out of here!" The servants were panic stricken. They tried to lift a window to call for help, but the windows were frozen. There was no telephone. They locked the bedroom doors and huddled in bed until morning. The coachman was not disturbed in his home over the horses and the Snell cow.

There was no excitement on the streets. Policeman Varney reported next morning, after the murder had been discovered, that he had seen two suspicious characters on the boulevard. He had tried to halt them, but they had run away and he did not dare to shoot because of the people on the street. About the time of the murder a man in a silk hat stopped him and asked:

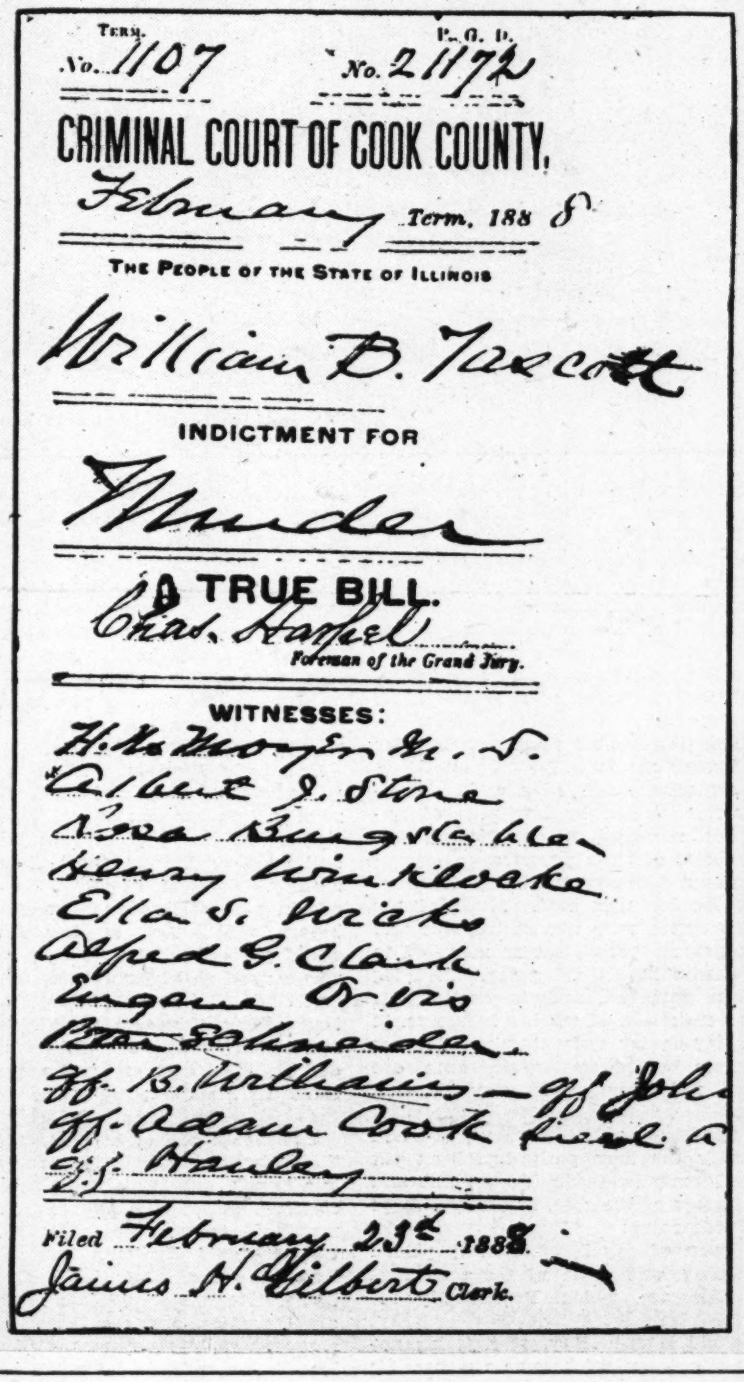

"Did you hear those shots? Sounded as though they came from the hall."

A carriage driver saw two men, one tall, wearing a fur cap, and one short, in a silk hat, coming from the rear of the Snell residence.

* * * *

At 6:30 in the morning Henry, the coachman, began his morning duties. It was his job to go into the house and stir up the fires. Approaching the kitchen door, he saw strange tracks in the snow, and when he reached the door he saw that something had happened. There was a hole above the lock, large enough to be reached through to turn the lock. It had been made by a circle of small bores and a saw. He entered the house cautiously and groped his way in the dim morning light to the foot of the stairs leading to the upper hall. He stopped at the office in the basement and found the safe wide open, two trunks overturned, and papers scattered around. On the floor were a box with burglar tools in it and a bundle of the house silver that had been made up and dropped. Evidently the burglars had been frightened and had fled.

n His Boulevard Home. Who Killed Him?

Henry started upstairs. At the head of the stairs, in the hallway, close to the parlor doors, he stumbled over the body of Snell. The old man was dead in his night clothes, revolver near his hand, blood clotted wounds in his side and in his head.

As there was no telephone in the house, the coachman ran to the nearest phone, a block away, and told the Lake street police. He also awakened A. J. Stone, Snell's son-in-law, in his home at Randolph and Ada streets. In half an hour the police, Coroner Hertz, Dr. Moyer, and many neighbors and friends were on the scene.

Inside the house, the men had ransacked the safe and had taken a package of county warrants and two checks drawn by Stone and indorsed by him. They were for $2,567 and $2,500. A ring and some other trinkets were missing. The haul was worth little to the burglars. They had not known the safe was open, as they had started to jimmy it. They had gone up to the parlor and there, the evidence showed, the shooting had taken place.

Reconstructing this tragedy, the investigators could picture the burglars caught in the parlor, crouched there, listening to the ominous footsteps of Snell as he came down the stairs in his nightgown, revolver in hand. They could see the stairway from the narrow opening in the doors, and they waited there for the advancing figure to come within the circle of the gas light at the foot of the stairway. Then they shot twice, both bullets chipping off a bit of doorway and going wild. Snell did not stop. He shot through the panels and came on, shouting. A third and fourth shot from the intruders struck him in two mortal places and he fell in the hallway. The men dropped everything and fled.

The plural has been used here because the police held to this two men burglary theory for several days. Suspects were dragged into the stations all over town and raids of the gangsters made. The men who had been sent to Joliet for the earlier Snell robbery were traced and found guiltless of this. Mayor Roche and many prominent citizens pressed for a solution. It was found that the bullets in Snell's body were of different size, making the use of two guns necessary. Despite this fact and the evidence of the footprints of two men in the snow, the police abandoned this theory after ten days and fastened the whole burden on Willie Tascott, and there it has rested all these years. Volk, the sculptor, made a death mask of Snell, and the millionaire was buried in a red cedar and metallic casket of the kind used for Gen. John A. Logan. There was nothing but a police circular to immortalize Willie and no photograph of him was ever available.

Willim B. Tascott was the son of J. B. Tascott, who had a prosperous paint business at 140 Ashland avenue at one time, but had practically retired at the time of this murder. Willie's mother died when he was a baby, and her sister, Mrs. Lampert, took care of him in a small town near Indianapolis. She returned to Chicago to keep house for the elder Tascott at 19 Ann street until he married again and moved to Washington boulevard and Waverly place.

Willie is remembered by the old Union park social circle. He was a good looking, red-cheeked, prepossessing boy, rather mischievous and fond of the girls. He went to parties and played croquet, sang songs by moonlight in summer drives, and was a normal, well boy of the period.

Something happened to him as he grew older. It is said he did not get along well with his stepmother. He was restless and remained away from home a good deal.

He saw the world from railroad trains, traveling out of Chicago as news butcher on two roads. He became wilder, and finally landed in prison in Kentucky at the age of 20. It appears he had gone as far away as Florida in his travels and had taken a job in a railroad office. Becoming weary of work, he had stolen a package of railroad tickets, stamped and punched them, and had taken them to Louisville to dispose of. He was quickly suspected and pleaded guilty, and was sentenced to one year in Frankfort jail. He was out in ten months. The description of him at the prison says: "Somewhat effeminate, smiles a good deal, line of gold along edge of two front teeth, upper lip drawn back, red cheeks."

He returned home, where his record was not known. He was as jaunty and dudish as ever, a great boaster, and disinclined to work. He made spasmodic efforts at holding jobs. He ran an elevator in the Palmer house and in the Exchange building. He was discharged at the latter place because he annoved the stenographers with his attentions. He worked for a few weeks on the old Times. He was a bellboy and held other light jobs briefly. His father was helping him irregularly and grieving over him. Willie stayed away from home. The family prepared to break up, the mother to go east and the father to California. Curiously enough, the actual departure from the home was on the day of the Snell murder. The family, however, claimed this was a coincidence.

Willie's brother, Frank, was married and living in Oak Park. Willie used to borrow a little of him once in a while, and he would go out there and stay for a week at a time. In January, the month before the murder, he spent a week or so at Frank's house, built a toboggan and snowman for the children, and enjoyed himself out of doors. He talked of going to England, and was restless. Frank knew of his Kentucky experience and suspected that Willie was engaged in petty thieving in Chicago. He did his best to persuade his brother to "settle down." Willie preferred to play pool and make an easy living, borrowing when short or perhaps hooking an overcoat, an umbrella, or a little silverware. He roomed with a jockey for a few months, stayed with a schoolmate, Fon Smith, and then went to live at the respectable rooming house of Mrs. Ella Wick, at 474 West Madison street. He told her he worked nights on a newspaper and remained out late every night. He played a mandolin which, it was found later, had been stolen. He appeared in different coats and hats and carried a gold headed cane.

It was in January, after he returned from playing in the snow with the children, that he began a series of petty burglaries, according to the police records. These included thefts of knives and forks from the Alonzo N. Reece residence, a coat and cap from Catherine Cook's house, a microscope, spoons, and rings from Charles H. Case; umbrellas, cane, and cap from John Marden, and a coat and umbrella from Joseph Rogerson. He was never seen at any of these houses. The police announced they had found some of the loot from these robberies in his room closet at Mrs. Wick's. The stuff was found there after Willie had gone, according to Lieut. John Bonfield, who had charge of the case.

Was Willie getting ready for a more desperate game at this time? He was strangely careless about his business and left trails as wide as a barn door. Take the testimony of Alfred G. Clark, a jeweler at 481 West Madison street. Willie came into his shop in January and wanted a pearl set in a square topped ring that was set with garnets and pearls and had one missing.

Willie carried a small russet valise swung over his shoulder with straps. He opened it casually while he was in the store. Clark noticed that there were several small tools in it.

"Are you a piano tuner?" he asked.

"Hell, no, I'm a burglar," said Willie.

Clark thought he was joking.

* * * *

Another astonishing incident showing naive preparations for such a job. On February 4 he went to a hardware shop to buy small bits and saws. These are the kind used by burglars, and Willie's demeanor attracted the attention of Cornelius Connell, the clerk. While Willie was making the purchase he walked up to Connell and said:

"How do you do, Mr. Connell. I expect you do not remember me. I'm Willie Tascott."

That was how the police first got wind of Tascott. The tools were put in a small box and had the firm's price mark in it. This box was found on the floor of the Snell office after the murder, and Connell told them of Will Tascott. The rest was easy.

It was February 17, nine days after the murder, that the police announced its solution. Fred Ebersold had been replaced as chief in the meantime, Mayor Roche appointing George Hubbard, a captain.

A police circular had been prepared for distribution by Lieutenant Bonfield. On this $500 reward was offered, although members of the Snell family had said they would offer $20,000. The circular follows:

"Look out for and arrest for burglary T. A. Gathright, alias Moore, alias Scott, alias Clark, 22 or 23 years of age, 5 feet 8 or 9 inches in height, 140 pounds weight, slim built, full, round face, heavy eyebrows, fair complexion, dark brown hair, thin on top of head, cut short; large dark eyes, small, thin dark mustache that may have been dyed. Wore when last seen brown and gray striped pants, stripe one-half inch wide, dark coat, vest and overcoat, black silk hat, square top ring set with garnets and pearls, one pearl missing. May carry cane with round gold head engraved W. B. T. in monogram, also russet covered oval valise 8 inches long, 8 inches wide, hung by strap over shoulder."

A few days later the reward was increased to $2,000, Tascott was referred to as "the supposed murderer of A. J. Snell," and the eyes were changed to blue.

witness one Jennie Franks, who had come from Peoria to live in a resort at 50 Curtis street. Jennie is described as "25 years old, tall, graceful, shrewd."

Her testimony narrowed down to this before the grand jury:

That about 10 o'clock Monday night befor the murder Tascott came to her house. It was the first time she had seen him. He wore a smooth finished overcoat and a silk hat and had a small valise swung over his shoulder. He carried a gold headed cane. She asked him why he did not have a monogram put on it and he said he would. He remained all night and returned the next evening, Tuesday, between 8 and 9 o'clock.

This was only a few hours before the murder. He showed her his cane that had been monogrammed. She asked him what was in his satchel and he said: "I'm a crook."

He opened his satchel and showed her his tools. He took two guns out of his pocket, one pearl handled, and showed her how he would use them. He crouched and maneuvered around the room, seizing the guns by the muzzle in Jessie James fashion. She thought he was a crank. He left late in the evening and she never saw him again.

This story is the basis for the police abandonment of the two men burglary.

"No, Tascott did the job singlehanded," said Bonfield. "He carried two guns, one ivory handled, and fired both. Snell caught him in the parlor and he shot. He is a mere boy, dudish, genteel, with many suits and property identified from other burglaries."

* * * *

Against Jennie Franks' story is that of Frank Tascott, the brother.

"My brother was here in my home the night Snell was murdered," he asid. "He came out between 4 and 5 o'clock and had supper with us. He went out between 7 and 8 and returned at 11:30. I sat up with him until 1 o'clock. In the morning he played with the children and we rode into town together. We separated on Randolph street. I supposed he was running an elevator. We heard the newsboys calling out the Snell murder. I bought a paper and we glanced over it together. Then we parted."

Willie's father was badly broken by the accusation. He could not believe it, although he knew his son had been a thief.

It was reported at first that in the ashes of a fire in Willie's room fragments of the Stone notes stolen from the safe had been found. Mrs. Wick, however, did not so testify before the grand jury. The police reported having found some of the stolen county warrants in Tascott's room. A. J. Stone testified concerning a number of stolen articles, but there were some things he did not tell the grand jury. He thought it would be better to wait until the trial, he said. The trial was never held.

William Pinkerton worked on the case for the family and the reward was increased from time to time, but it brought no results. Willie was never seen in Chicago again, so far as is known. Inspector Byrnes, the great thief catcher of the New York police department, gave out the casual opinion one day that Tascott was not the criminal; that he had never shown the hardihood to kill; that he talked too much and was merely a catspaw for some one else. Byrnes, however, made a diplomatic denial of this interview after the Chicago police complained.

Willie Walked away from Chicago and all the police of the world were unable to catch him. He went first to St. Paul and remained there about a week. He was there when the hunt for him began. He took no particular trouble to hide his identity. He carried his valise and his gold headed cane about the streets for a few days, then pawned them. He had no money. He called on a friend that he had known in railroad news company service and talked about a job he had in Chicago. He was recognized by several acquaintances on the streets. A St. Paul detective heard about the search for him and sent word of his presence in Milwaukee to Chicago police. It is said that the man who received the message carried it around in his pocket for four days. When he gave up the message it was too late. Detectives were sent to St. Paul, but Willie had disappeared. Before he left he made a change of dress. He wore a black suit, with the binding somewhat worn. It looked old, as though he had found it in a pawnshop. He wore a short brown overcoat, a black stiff hat, and had his mustache shaved off. He exchanged his telltale valise for a square alligator one of russet color.

* * * *

He was never heard of after that. Reports of him came from California, London, Melbourne, and from an outlaw camp in the old Indian territory. Perhaps the police did not really want to find him. Perhaps his disappearance was financed. It seems certain that he was connected with the Snell murder, but he may have been hiding some one else. Impending developments were announced from time to time after the disappearance, but nothing new ever developed. The case fell into the silence and mystery that has covered it ever since.

Willie's own philosophy of life was expressed in a few lines which he wrote in the autograph book of a girl friend in Oak Park. It was this:

"What's the use of always fretting
All the trials that we shall find
Ever strewn along our pathway?
Travel on, and never mind."

He may be still traveling on.

royal oppression. Only a little uprising, but as defiantly real as that greater one some day to unsheathe the sword of his famous descendant.

Now an unworthy man sat in the great velvet chair as governor of Virginia—Sir John Harvey. Overproud, arrogant, he strutted in gold-laced finery about little Jamestown. A contemptuous smile for even the members of his council. He sought to make laws all by himself, and suppressed petitions from the colonists to the crown.

Indignation and resentment smouldered along the James; almost flamed along the York.

On a late April evening, two or three men, seemingly strangers on the York, appeared at the house of William Warren, Marteau's neighbor down-river. They were refused admittance, being told that court was in session. They took that for what it was worth, and somehow found places where they "bended themselves to harken." If this was a court, evidently the man arraigned at the bar was Sir John Harvey. Listening ears identified several prominent men among the speakers; especially the leader, Justice Nicolas Marteau. By the time he had finished speaking, the eavesdroppers scented treason, and took off through the black forest for Jamestown. It was far into the night before they reached Harvey with the story of the "mutenye."

His action was prompt and drastic. Next morning Captain Marteau and two or three others were arrested, carried to Jamestown, given over to a brutal keeper and, by Harvey's order, placed in irons. When they would have the reason for all this, they were told they "should know at the gallows."

Now the governor summoned the council to his own home. Memorable meeting. Harvey strode in anger up and down the room, virtually demanding the prisoners' instant death. He found himself facing cold, unimpressive men. He stormed his demand. They coolly said no. Advancing to one of the leading members, he struck him heavily on the shoulder, declaring, "I arrest you, sir, upon suspicion of treason!" Suddenly cold councilors flamed hot enough. They crowded angrily about the representative of the king. One seized him roughly, exclaiming, "And we the like to you, sir!" Forced into a chair, Harvey sat helpless. Then a signal was made at the window, and in an instant the house was surrounded by armed men. The royal governor of Virginia was a prisoner.

But courage held. Harvey was sent to England; an acting-governor was chosen; and a brave spirit unquelled by irons went back to the York plantation, to await a summons that fortunately never came. So George Washington's French forefather stood leader and martyr in America's first rebellion against oppressive rule—and still, not an English forefather, at least not a Washington, in the New World.

The king would not brook the high-handed action of Virginia. Harvey should go back "if but for a day!" Before long, the hated knight came sailing up the James river to be governor again. He started at once to even up scores with the councilors who had "thrust him out!" The other leaders did not fare so badly. Wonder if a bit of sentiment did not intervene to spare Justice Marteau.

It was this way. Prominent in the train of the returning Harvey was a certain young George Reade, now living in great style at the governor's house. Now perhaps it was upon some visit by the Marteaus to Jamestown, or by the governor to his York river lands, or—well, they met anyway, this George Reade and Captain Marteau's daughter, Elizabeth.

Young Reade won the French-English girl, and likely a voyage to London made by the Marteaus was with an eye to the trousseau. The marriage, occurring in 1641, was typical of the times in the extreme youthfulness of the bride. Elizabeth Marteau could not have been more than 14 years old.

This notable couple made their plantation home about where historic Williamsburg now stands. And there was born a daughter, Mildred; bringing Washington's French ancestry a generation nearer—this Mildred Reade to become his great-grandmother.

Meanwhile, Captain Marteau, growing old as age went in those times, was still holding the frontier. Holding it indeed through another massacre. For in 1644 the Indians again attempted the extermination of the English. Even by the middle of the century, civilization here stopped where Nicolas Marteau had stopped; white man's land, red man's land, facing each other across the York.

As opportunity opened, Captain Marteau's adventurous spirit went leaping far into the wilderness of the Potomac. In 1654 and 1655 he secured 4,000 acres of land on the south side of that stream. Here again, in a strange way, his life seemed reaching out to that great one the far future held.

By this time Virginia had divided herself, wild regions and all, into counties. Up there, vaguely defined along the Potomac, was Westmoreland county. And now Nicolas Marteau—a vast New World to choose from—chose lands in Westmoreland county, where, some far day, George Washington should be born! Even as though, his own end near, he placed divining touch of prophecy upon the wilderness.

With that we about lose sight of this Gallic grandfather of our country. In the spring of 1657 he died. Even his death spoke coincidence. He had lived threescore and six years; three-score and seven was to be the span of the great man to come after. And now, as they laid to rest this ancestral Marteau, who had been soldier, burgess and justice, who had served Virginia against savage and against king—still not an ancestral Washington in the New World.

But, at this very point, began the Washington line, with which this Marteau line was to inter-marry. For in this year, 1657, came to Virginia young John Washington, founder of the family in America. Here we may sketch rapidly. John Washington married Ann Pope, and to them was born a son, Lawrence. Captain Marteau's granddaughter, Mildred Reade (how those French-English girls picked out important men!) married Augustin Warner, and to them was born a daughter, Mildred. At last occurred the union of the two family lines in the marriage of this Lawrence Washington to this Mildred Warner. But two steps after that union. Son of these parents was Augustine Washington; and son of his was George Washington.

Long years went by. The American Revolution came. Captain Nicolas Marteau a century and a quarter gone—forgotten. So completely forgotten that now a great military spectacle amazingly associated with his name aroused no memories. Nobody knew; nobody sensed his presence there.

It was the closing scene of the war. The army of Lord Cornwallis lay within strong fortifications at Yorktown. About him, in a great semicircle from river bluffs above around to river bluffs below, stretched the beseiging American and French lines of General Washington. Rochambeau and Lafayette were with him. Out in the wide water lay the fleet of DeGrasse.

Days and nights of ceaseless cannon roar; charges and countercharges; French-American co-operative spirit running high. But how wildly that spirit would have leaped could sentiment have had full play! What if somehow word could have gone down the lines that this very battleground was Franco-American—that this stirring spectacle was being staged upon a Colonial plantation won from the forest by a noted French Virginian! What if those soldiers of France had been told that his blood, their blood, flowed in the veins of that already idolized leader, George Washington!

And now, Marteau again. A dramatic scene when General Thomas Nelson directed cannon to be turned upon his own house in the village because it was British headquqarters—he also lineally descended from that old French Virginian!

And yet again. Closer press the beseigers; commanding redoubts taken in a night; white flag at last over the British ramparts. In a house a little way down the river officers from the two sides arranging terms of surrender—and that very house the home of a great-great-granddaughter of Nicolas Marteau.

Nor even yet the end of these singular associations. That "Surrender House" (still existing) is supposed to stand on the site of, or actually to be, the "Warren House" of Colonial days—where Justice Marteau brought himself to irons, voicing liberty in defiance of a royal governor!

Now at last, the long struggle was over. Liberty, even independence, won. A century and a half between the French grandside's voice and the far-grandson's guns.

Another century and a half and we stand in our own times. Times of considerable belated interest in our national story and its landmarks.

Popular attention turns to old Yorktown. Vigorous efforts are being made to preserve this historic shrine. The corporation organized for the restoration of Williamsburg, in which Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., is interested, has bought the "Surrender Field" and the "Surrender House," intending to properly care for these rather neglected features. Congress is proposing a sesquicentennial celebration here in 1931.

Out of all this thought for Yorktown should come some memorial to that gallant forgotten adventurer who won the historic site from the wilderness; who hazarded it and life for Colonial liberty; who, even long dead, seemed holding the wide acres for our victory ground; who lies here at last in an unknown grave: George Washington's French grandsire, Captain Nicolas Marteau, gentleman.

Bob's Lucky Day

Lure of Camp Fire's Crackling Beckons the Boy to Its Warmth. Through the Contacts Made and Training Received He Returns Home the Most Popular Boy In His Set

BY MRS. HAROLD (COACH) BARRON

Illustrations Show Campers During Rest and Recreation Periods.

TUESDAY was surely Bob's lucky day. He was very happy and mother was quite surprised to see him arrive home so promptly. Usually after school was dismissed Bob lingered on his way home. Today, however, he reported at home very cheerfully and later went out to play with the fellows. During the dinner hour the family was surprised to learn that his lessons had been prepared before dinner. Mother and dad exchanged knowing glances for Bob was having a caller at eight o'clock—and that explained everything.

Promptly at eight o'clock the door bell rang and to Bob's delight the director of a popular summer camp entered the living room. The director was a very cheerful man and soon became the center of all interest.

After Bob's parents inquired about the camp management—its schedule, the boys' diet, the staff, type of campers, sanitation and moral influence, they became very much interested in the work of summer camps.

Now Bob was like every other boy of today—he liked to play and to be entertained. He really thought that spending his vacation at the seashore or in the country, was the best way to spend the summer. His parents, too, had the idea that the simpler way of living, resting and change of scenery were all that was necessary for a growing boy.

"When we came back from Tylo," Bob said, "I could swim, but Jim Jones could swim, dive, make bows and arrows and play more games than I. He went to camp last summer."

Bob's father said: "We feel that the boys in our neighborhood, who attend summer camp seem so much more advanced than Robert. Of course, he has his little friends at the resort but they have no older men who are interested in helping them to play. Although Bob spends a real healthy summer, we find that he has missed 'the team association' and benefits of a well-directed camp. This Jim Jones, to whom Bob referred, has been a camper for two years. While he does not stand out as a winner in any one sport, he is the most popular fellow in the neighborhood. He has learned the game of give-and-take and is more confident in a modest way. It seems to be no effort for him to smile when the others beat him. All of us are anxious to include Jim in parties or on trips, for he is the type of boy that we admire."

"Jim Jones said, that he didn't know anybody when he first went to camp," Bob remarked. "You just ought to hear him tell about the fun they had on the special train that took them to camp. He said that the coaches and teachers who helped the counselors take care of them on the train told jokes and did card tricks. The life-saving teacher told them a story and it was so good that nobody even talked until he stopped and said, 'Now fellows, you had better eat your lunch.' Jim said when they arrived at the station they were put in busses and cars and ridden for about three miles right up the side of a mountain. He told us he would never forget it because everybody was talking at the same time and the counselors were pointing out different scenes along the road to the new boys."

"Whee, what a swell place the camp was in, Jim said. There was about five acres of flat ground and the tents and tent-houses were all in a row—almost on the top of the hill. Then there were baseball diamonds, tennis courts, workshops, dining hall and everything. As soon as they arrived at c[illegible] Jim said, the directors called all t[illegible]ames to see if everybody was there. [illegible]n he called out the coaches' and counselors' names. Soon he put five boys together and a counselor over each group. 'Five boys to each counselor,' he said, 'and remember that each boy is responsible to his special counselor.'

"He then called out the tents by numbers and assigned each group a tent. When he came to Jim's bunch he said: 'Mr. Thomas you will have tent number eight.' They looked at each other and wondered which tent was number eight, but Mr. Thomas said 'Get your things together and follow me, fellows.' Right away I liked him, Jim declared. He led the way and after climbing the hill, there they were in their new home! They had to climb up five steps to get in their tent, and Mr. Thomas helped them with their baggage. One fellow sure had enough equipment. He had a banjo, a tennis racquet, a golf bag, camera, baseball bat and glove, a handbag. A boy from Texas said 'It looks as if you are going to stay all year.' 'Wish I could,' he replied—this place sure suits me.'

"Mr. Thomas showed them their cots and told them that they would be one family from that time on. He said that he would help them with everything until they kinda got used to camping. 'Just call me Harry,' he said 'and I'll answer.' The director poked his head in their tent and called: 'Before we do anything we'd better go down and claim our trunks.' Jim said that they raced down the hill and there were eighty trunks—steamer trunks, army trunks, wardrobe trunks, and all sorts of trunks. What fun they had in finding which of the eighty belonged to each camper! At last Dick Harlowe, the famous baseball coach, said to Jim: 'Come on, Big Boy, let's go! They found Jim's trunk. The coach took one end and Jim helped with the other and off they went!'

"Gosh!" said Bob, "how I wish I could go to camp."

"It doesn't take boys long to get acquainted," said Bob's mother. "I just hate the thought of having him live away from me for eight weeks."

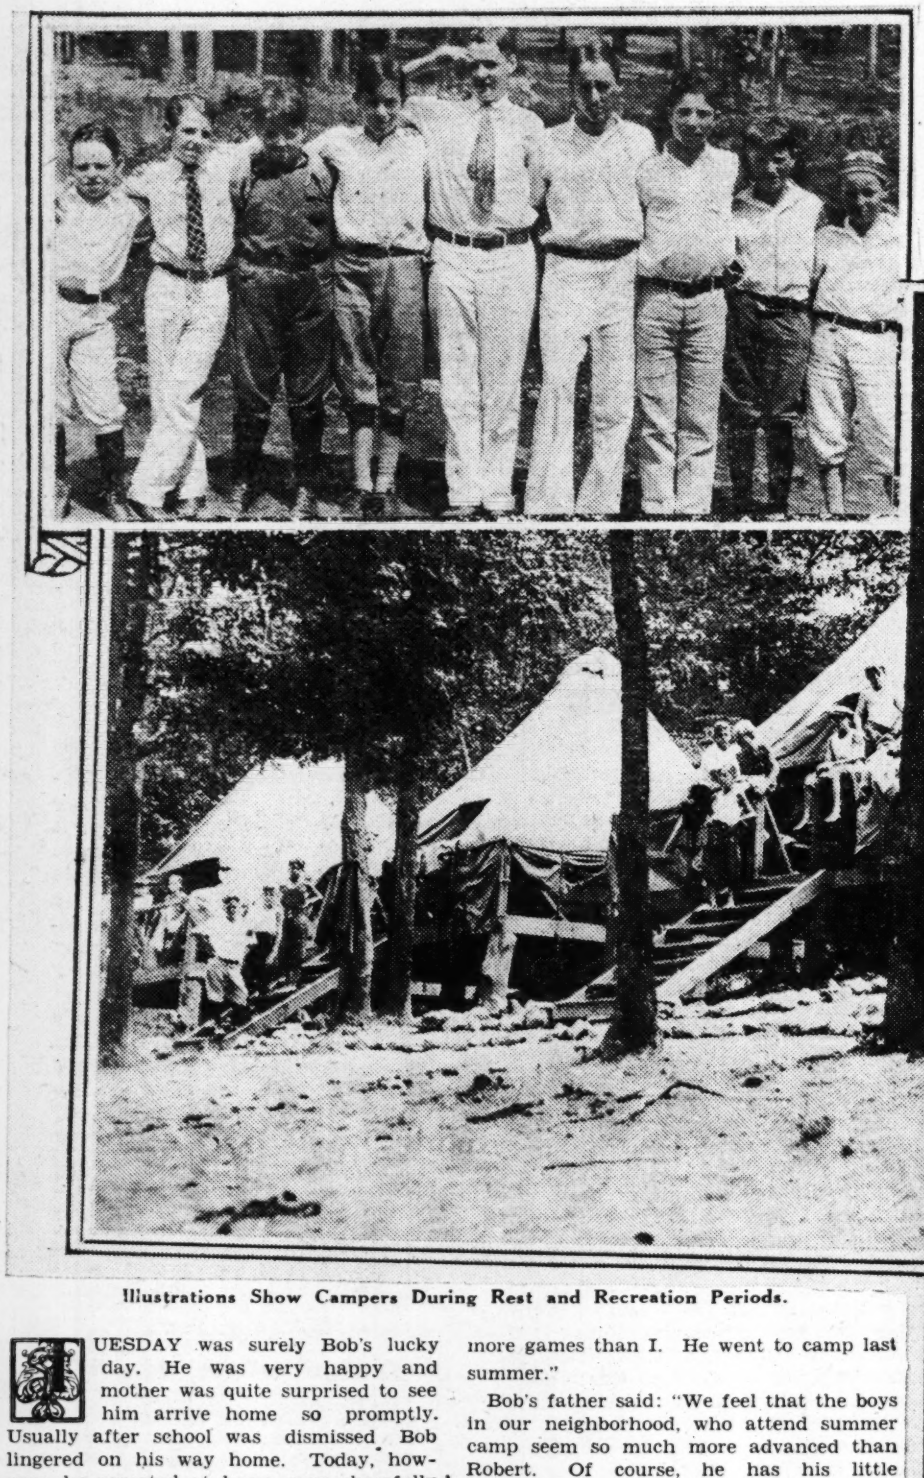

Bob and his father gave a little laugh, but the Camp Director was a man of understanding and experience. "Yes," he said. "I try to help the parents to realize that this separation is only a short one and it is a happy boy who returns. When I think of the good that summer camp has done for over a million boys, I feel that

Things New and Old About the Bible

BY REV. W. P. KING

THE ancient Hebrew prophets were the pioneers of a monotheistic faith. The God of the whole earth could not be the monopoly of one nation. The prophets in making religion inward and personal made it universal.

To individualize religion it is the same time to universalize it.

Since the spiritual nature of man is the same, a religion that is inward and personally realized is evidence of its sufficiency for all men and its fitness for all men.

WILLIAM P. KING
Book Editor and Editor of
THE METHODIST QUARTERLY REVIEW
Nashville, Tenn.

The older forms of religion were the product of the collective mind seeking satisfaction for its needs. Universal religions are the outcome of an experience on the part of the individual.

The three historical religions with their claims to universality are personally founded, Mohammedanism, Buddhism and Christianity.

Mohammedanism is not the result of religious imposture, but it represented a sincere search after God and after a God who is a perfect unity.

But it has very decided limitations. It relied on physical force for its propagation.

It was an impoverished idea of God. It has an external conception of piety and lacks the inward spirituality of a universal religion.

It makes very real the other world, but gives no stimulus to social and intellectual development in this world.

Buddhism, on the contrary, appeals to the inner spirit of man. Redemption lies within the man himself.

Nirvana was the suppression of all desire and the will to live and the casting away of the fetters of sense.

Buddhism possesses the quality of inwardness, but really ceased to be a religion. It has no God nor theology and offered no outlook into a higher world, but was simply a mode of living. The goal was negative rather than positive. Its creed is without hope or inspiration and affords no promise for the spiritual development of humanity.

Christianity incorporates the ethical and spiritual elements of the Jewish religion, but it comes forth with the freshness and force of a new creation. Its claim to universality rests on the unique and pre-eminent personality of Jesus Christ.

It possesses the one right to universality on account of its conception of God and man and their mutual relations, the idea of society, the infinite worth of the individual soul, and the needs and possibilities of human nature.

By way of summary, there are spiritism, the religion of the tribe, polytheism, the religion of a nation, and monothism, which goes beyond the limit of a nation and survives the dissolution of national states.

The movement in general terms is from the natural to the spiritual, from the outward to the inward.

In spiritism the gods do not rise above the natural system of things, in polytheism they are exalted above the immediate surroundings, and in monotheism God transcends the material universe while sustaining it and working through it.

Again in spiritism the man's relation to his God is natural and physical, in polytheism there is the beginning of ethical ideas, and in monotheism there is moral and spiritual relationship.

In spiritism the good man seeks and prays for material, food, health and prosperity.

In polytheism there is the feeble beginning of the recognition of moral good.

In monotheism there is the higher good of communion and fellowship with God.

These three stages of life mark an ascending scale. What are the factors in this religious development?

There is first social changes. As already observed, the tribes united to form the stage, and the states came in contact either through war or peace.

An increasingly complex social system created a need which the older religious conceptions failed to satisfy, and the pressure of this want resulted in the development of religion.

The fetish worshipper flings the fetish away which refuses to work. In the long run, all men will fling away a religion that will not work.

The second factor is the growth of the ethical consciousness.

As moral ideas were developed, the character of the gods were elevated, for it was supposed that the gods ought at least to be as good as men.

The prophets of the ethical life were pioneers in the path of progress, and through severe conflict broke down traditional ideas and customs.

The third factor in religious development is the increase of scientific knowledge.

The increase of knowledge shows the contradiction between old religious notions and the mental outlook. Religion and reason will not continue in permanent contradiction.

An increase of knowledge brings a stimulus to the religious mind to adjust itself to the wider and truer outlook. Faith is above reason, but it must not contradict reason. Modern scientific knowledge with a larger universe, an older universe and a gradually evolving universe has of necessity brought a modifying and transforming influence to the doctrines of religion. Traditional notions have yielded slowly, but traditions not based on fact nor in harmony with reason must break down, for the developing process is inevitable. The world which God made affords a revelation of the nature and character and greatness of the God who made it.

down meekly at her husband's side and waited while he read the paper. He gave her each page as he finished it. After more caustic comment on this fact Fanny passed to a discussion of the trip to Cherbourg and how much she always hated it. Phil said it wasn't so bad, that he enjoyed looking out of the window.

Fanny, who had a seat next to the window, ridiculed the idea that the view was anything at all and announced her intention of going to sleep. She pillowed her head upon Phil's shoulder so that it was impossible for him to look out of the window and closed her eyes in tentative fashion. It was still possible for Phil to stare ahead of him, and so, after more than half an hour of boredom, he began to read one of the despised magazines. However, the first time he turned a page Fanny's tentative eyelids jerked up and she inquired in fretful tones why it was necessary to make all that noise. So he stopped reading and glared bleakly into space.

By this time the French couple had finished their newspaper and were deep in a political discussion. Jeannette had started it by asking Paul some questions which showed a comprehensive grasp not only of politics, but of international law. The conversation that ensued was not an unusual one for a Continental man and woman, but in America it would have required no less than a superwoman to sustain anything like it.

Jeannette was not a superwoman. She was the average more or less dowdy Continental wife. It was evident that she made no pretense to brilliance; her most casual reference showed an age-long familiarity with culture which needed no stressing. Their discussion might have served as lecture material for many an American Current Events Club, but was to them obviously no more than a casual exchange of views and ideas. She gave him the conversational lead. If she learned something from him she let him know it. If he learned something from her she veiled the fact. And often when an idea of hers wormed its way into Paul's consciousness as one of his, a new one, really his own, would flash out.

Fanny happened to open her eyes and survey the French couple in a moment when Paul had started to go to sleep on Jeannette's capacious bosom. Just as Fanny looked their way, Jeannette, out of the fullness of her content, lifted Paul's hand and kissed it.

"Did you ever see anything so disgusting?" Fanny breathed. "As if she were his servant!"

Phil said nothing. The American husband has long since learned not to contradict his wife, for the result will not be an interesting exchange of ideas. So Phil said nothing.

When finally Fanny and Phil left the compartment to go to lunch, Jeannette's round eyes followed the mink coat wonderingly.

"It is fantastic—those pears of American men!" she exclaimed.

I found another, more pointed example in New York recently when I attended a dinner of professional women. It was a brilliant assemblage. I sat between a great French singer and a noted American woman executive who was so fascinating looking that I could not stop studying her. She was about thirty-five years old, but possessed a birdlike sprightliness which would have fooled the casual observed into thinking that she was ten years younger.

This woman was slim and dark and beautiful, with eyes that were restless unless she was dominating the conversation, in which case they became blissfully blind. She was married and professionally known by her married name, and she was freely criticizing a woman writer at the table who had retained her maiden name, although the writer's maiden name had become a well-known trade-mark that it would have been folly to abandon.

I became rather weary of this grown-up flapper's undeniably amusing monopolizations, and, when a cranny appeared in her monologue, I set a firm conversational wedge into it. An editor across the way helped by asking me about the article that she knew I was writing. Deliberately I began to describe, to the French singer and the American executive, the conclusions which I have reached and stated in this article. I was very curious to get their points of view and I opened my subject from that angle, supposing, however, that I would first be allowed time in which to present my own. But the little dark lady interrupted me.

"American women not understand men!" she squeaked. "But, my dear, we would if there was anything to understand! And as for our thinking Continental men are more attractive—well, they are! They know how to treat a woman, they know how to make love."

She paused a moment for breath. I was silent, frozen by the cocksure finality of her dictum, which had corrected my unfinished statement as if she were a teacher mending a pupil's mistake in arithmetic. Gorgeously she swept on, giving me no chance for expostulation or rebuttal.

"Of course—I'm sorry to spoil your article!"

I could not tell her that instead she had given me my conclusion. She was as positive that she had crushed my tissue of inventions as she was sure that there was nothing to understand—nothing beyond what she already understood. As I watched her pounce on the girl on the other side of her I could not help wondering if she had given her men as much initiative in making love as she had given me in sustaining a conversation.

The French singer turned to me thoughtfully. "I am sure that I agree with you," she said, "but I would like to hear more."

Therein lay all the difference.

down meekly at her husband's side and waited while he read the paper. He gave her each page as he finished it. After more caustic comment on this fact Fanny passed to a discussion of the trip to Cherbourg and how much she always hated it. Phil said it wasn't so bad, that he enjoyed looking out of the window.

Fanny, who had a seat next to the window, ridiculed the idea that the view was anything at all and announced her intention of going to sleep. She pillowed her head upon Phil's shoulder so that it was impossible for him to look out of the window and closed her eyes in tentative fashion. It was still possible for Phil to stare ahead of him, and so, after more than half an hour of boredom, he began to read one of the despised magazines. However, the first time he turned a page Fanny's tentative eyelids jerked up and she inquired in fretful tones why it was necessary to make all that noise. So he stopped reading and glared bleakly into space.

By this time the French couple had finished their newspaper and were deep in a political discussion. Jeannette had started it by asking Paul some questions which showed a comprehensive grasp not only of politics, but of international law. The conversation that ensued was not an unusual one for a Continental man and woman, but in America it would have required no less than a superwoman to sustain anything like it.

Jeannette was not a superwoman. She was the average more or less dowdy Continental wife. It was evident that she made no pretense to brilliance; her most casual reference showed an age-long familiarity with culture which needed no stressing. Their discussion might have served as lecture material for many an American Current Events Club, but was to them obviously no more than a casual exchange of views and ideas. She gave him the conversational lead. If she learned something from him she let him know it. If he learned something from her she veiled the fact. And often when an idea of hers wormed its way into Paul's consciousness as one of his, a new one, really his own, would flash out.

Fanny happened to open her eyes and survey the French couple in a moment when Paul had started to go to sleep on Jeannette's capacious bosom. Just as Fanny looked their way, Jeannette, out of the fullness of her content, lifted Paul's hand and kissed it.

"Did you ever see anything so disgusting?" Fanny breathed. "As if she were his servant!"

Phil said nothing. The American husband has long since learned not to contradict his wife, for the result will not be an interesting exchange of ideas. So Phil said nothing.

When finally Fanny and Phil left the compartment to go to lunch, Jeannette's round eyes followed the mink coat wonderingly.

"It is fantastic—those pears of American men!" she exclaimed.

I found another, more pointed example in New York recently when I attended a dinner of professional women. It was a brilliant assemblage. I sat between a great French singer and a noted American woman executive who was so fascinating looking that I could not stop studying her. She was about thirty-five years old, but possessed a birdlike sprightliness which would have fooled the casual observed into thinking that she was ten years younger.

This woman was slim and dark and beautiful, with eyes that were restless unless she was dominating the conversation, in which case they became blissfully blind. She was married and professionally known by her married name, and she was freely criticizing a woman writer at the table who had retained her maiden name, although the writer's maiden name had become a well-known trade-mark that it would have been folly to abandon.

I became rather weary of this grown-up flapper's undeniably amusing monopolizations, and, when a cranny appeared in her monologue, I set a firm conversational wedge into it. An editor across the way helped by asking me about the article that she knew I was writing. Deliberately I began to describe, to the French singer and the American executive, the conclusions which I have reached and stated in this article. I was very curious to get their points of view and I opened my subject from that angle, supposing, however, that I would first be allowed time in which to present my own. But the little dark lady interrupted me.

"American women not understand men!" she squeaked. "But, my dear, we would if there was anything to understand! And as for our thinking Continental men are more attractive—well, they are! They know how to treat a woman, they know how to make love."

She paused a moment for breath. I was silent, frozen by the cocksure finality of her dictum, which had corrected my unfinished statement as if she were a teacher mending a pupil's mistake in arithmetic. Gorgeously she swept on, giving me no chance for expostulation or rebuttal.

"Of course—I'm sorry to spoil your article!"

I could not tell her that instead she had given me my conclusion. She was as positive that she had crushed my tissue of inventions as she was sure that there was nothing to understand—nothing beyond what she already understood. As I watched her pounce on the girl on the other side of her I could not help wondering if she had given her men as much initiative in making love as she had given me in sustaining a conversation.

The French singer turned to me thoughtfully. "I am sure that I agree with you," she said, "but I would like to hear more."

Therein lay all the difference.

When Justice Triumphed

IN ALL the long record of murder, few cases have had such an astounding climax as that of Edward Keller.

Indeed, his life was a whole series of climaxes, spaced over twenty years of intermittent criminality. Justice played a part in the drama from the beginning but it was not a conspicuously brilliant part; and while we may say that Justice triumphed in the end, it was not the Justice we usually allude to in these accounts.

It has been written that Keller was two men in one—a good man and a bad man, a sort of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, one generous and benevolent, the other brutal and evil. That might be said of most any criminal, but it seems particularly applicable to Keller. The criminal in him, however, was dominant most of his life, particularly so at the end.

Climax No. 1 came in 1905 after Keller had been a member of the New York city fire department for about a year. His superiors thought so well of him that he was entrusted with funds of the firemen's benevolent association. Keller administered the fund scrupulously for a while and then abruptly disappeared with the bankroll.

He was arrested within twenty-four hours and sent to Sing Sing for six years.

He reappeared on the scene years later in Philadelphia. He had apparently resolved to go straight, for in 1913 we find him part owner of a trunk manufacturing concern with Daniel J. McNichol, nephew of the late State Senator James P. McNichol.

Then on March 30, 1914, McNichol vanished.

He left his home early the morning of the 30th, drew $1,200 from the bank, and started for the factory. Keller went to the McNichol home later in the day to find out what had happened to keep his partner from coming to work. He was surprised to hear that Dan had left the house, ostensibly to go to business.

"Well, that's certainly strange," said Keller. "I've been at the office for two hours and he never showed up. I thought maybe he was sick."

Keller notified the police department. A wide search was made. As part of their inquiry, the police looked into the books of the concern and found the company to be in a prosperous condition. Evidently the man had not committed suicide on account of financial difficulties.

About six weeks after the disappearance, Keller called on Mrs. McNichol.

"I have news for you, Mrs. McNichol," he said, "but before I tell you, I want you to swear that you won't breathe a word of it to anybody. Otherwise we'll both get into very serious trouble."

Mrs. McNichol promised.

Keller told her he had received a letter from Dan, that he was in Boston, that he had left Philadelphia because he had heard the police were after him for an offense he had committed years before, before he was married. Keller said he had burned the letter for safety's sake.

"Incidentally," continued Keller, "he wanted me to tell you that he needs money, a few hundred dollars, to see him through until this thing blows over."

Mrs. McNichol gave him the money, and murmuring his sympathy, Keller departed.

That was the first of many visits during the following year. Things, it appeared, had not blown over. McNichol still was afraid to return, afraid to communicate with his wife, afraid to have her join him. And he still needed money. It was unfortunate, but it wouldn't be long now, Keller told her each time. Just a few more hundred dollars, he assured her, and Dan would be on his feet again.

Mrs. McNichol pleaded with Keller to let her go to her husband, but he insisted this would be the height of folly. As sure as fate if she did that, Dan would be ruined, sent to prison for several years at least.

So the unfortunate woman had no alternative but to turn over the money and hope for the best.

But all good things must end. The day came when the woman defied Keller, accused him of deceiving her about Dan's whereabouts, and of pocketing the money himself. Keller flared up indignantly at her charges.

"If that's the way you feel about it," he exclaimed, "I wash my hands of the whole business. I am sorry for you, but I am more sorry for Dan. I'm sure I don't know what's going to happen to him."

Keller came no more.

In the meanwhile he had stopped manufacturing trunks and gone into the laundry business in another part of town. Another concern took possession of the building in which Keller and McNichol had conducted their business.

Then—another climax!

On December 15, 1915, two workmen went to this building to install a new heating system. They had to excavate part of the cellar to lay a foundation for the furnace. The workmen had dug down about three feet when their shovels struck something hard.

It was a trunk.

The men scooped out the earth from around the trunk. An overpowering odor filled the cellar. They dragged the trunk out of the hole and ripped open the lid.

There, crammed inside, was the disintegrated body of a man. He had been beaten into insensibility and then shot in the head.

This photo, taken in 1924 at the time Keller was paroled from prison, shows him with Jennie Flanagan, the welfare worker he married and deserted in six weeks.

Naturally the authorities concluded that this was the missing Daniel McNichol. But they saw that identification would be difficult, for all the usual marks of identity had been removed.

Detectives located Keller and questioned him. He strongly doubted that this could be the body of McNichol. As a matter of fact, he told the officers confidentially, he had been in communication with McNichol only a short while before.

"You don't say!" they exclaimed. "What was his idea in leaving town?"

"He wanted to get rid of his wife," Keller replied. "I think there was another woman—you know how it is sometimes."

But Mrs. McNichol had a different story to tell. She told how Keller had come to her and obtained money again and again. As for Keller's story about their domestic life, it was a lie—she and Dan had been the happiest of couples.

The authorities decided to keep a close watch on Mr. Edward Keller.

Before long the body was definitely identified as McNichols by the dead man's dentist, who had done considerable work on his teeth. The trunk in which the corpse had been buried was as definitely identified as one that had been manufactured by Keller's concern, and finally a watch belonging to McNichol was found to have been pawned by the man under suspicion.

Keller was arrested and charged with murder. He was placed on trial before Judge Francois Bregy on April 22, 1916.

The defendant protested his innocence, but the prosecution was able to weave a rather powerful net of circumstantial evidence. They clinched the case against him through the testimony of two leather merchants, who identified thongs with which the victim had been bound as having been sold to Keller.

Keller's lawyers ridiculed the evidence, told the jury that Keller simply could not be convicted on such a parade of circumstances.

The jury hesitated at finding the man guilty of murder in the first degree, which this crime certainly was.

So they compromised. Edward Keller went to prison to serve ten to twelve years for manslaughter.

He went to Eastern penitentiary, where he soon established himself as an obedient, trustworthy and altogether superior type of prisoner. He worked at a trade he knew, the manufacture of leather novelties, and made considerable money. He made expensive brief cases and sent them gratis to notables of the nation, including President Harding and Governors Sproul and Pinchot of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Edward Keller unquestionably knew how to behave in prison.

We approach another climax. . . .

While Keller was in prison there came to visit him one day an attractive welfare worked named Jennie V. Flanagan. Keller immediately interested her. He poured out the story of his past—part of it, at any rate—and pictured himself as a man who had been a victim of cruel circumstances, one who needed but a fair chance to go straight.

"And to think I am serving time in prison for murder!" he cried, and he seemed on the brink of tears. "Miss Flanagan, I have done wrong in my life, but I tell you I never struck a man in my life! Sometimes I think I will go mad, brooding here on the injustice of it all—that I, Edward Keller, am serving time for murder. Do I look like a murderer, Miss Flanagan?"

"No; O, no!" she responded. "I think it is a terrible shame. I want to help you, very much."

Miss Flanagan pledged herself to work for Keller's release. She went to see Dr. Herbert Goddard, noted specialist of Philadelphia, and a member of the prison board of trustees. Dr. Goddard had helped gain the release of many inmates of the penitentiary and had seen nearly all of them rehabilitate themselves under his kindly guidance. Now, at Miss Flanagan's request, he went to see Keller.

And he, too, was interested.

In subsequent months, while Miss Flanagan and Dr. Goddard strove in the prisoner's behalf, a romance sprang up between Keller and his pretty "prison angel." Her visits to the penitentiary became more and more frequent. The day came when he told her he loved her. He told her that but for her he would have lost his mind; that she had become his life.

He asked her if she would marry him when he won his freedom. She consented.

On October 24, 1924, Edward Keller walked out of Eastern penitentiary. He had won a parole on Dr. Goddard's recommendation. Miss Flanagan met him at the prison gates. They drove to the city hall and were married in the same courtroom where, eight years before, Keller had been convicted and sentenced.

Six weeks later he deserted her.

Mrs. Keller revealed a long while later that her husband, after they were married, had abruptly started acting very strangely, as though he were out of his mind. He had talked about killing Dr. Goddard, for one thing, and had confessed to her that he was mortally afraid of the dark. She said he had insisted upon keeping the light on all night in their room.

But that did not come out at the time Keller left his bride of six weeks. Mrs. Keller was reluctant to tell any one about her failure. She didn't want to admit yet that it was a failure.

In the meanwhile Dr. Goddard had offered Keller financial assistance but the paroled prisoner had declined the offer, revealing that he had piled up almost $10,000 from the sale of his leather novelties.

Another climax——

Within a few weeks of his release Keller applied for and obtained a job of night watchman in the Corn Exchange bank of Philadelphia!

Keller was one of five watchmen who were required to press a button every half hour during the night. This automatically sent a message into a detective agency which protected the institution.

Soon after Keller entered the bank's employ, $25,000 in securities were stolen from the bank. At this time Keller's sinister past was still unknown and he was not questioned. Subsequent events led the police to link his name with the theft, but it is still a quesion whether he ever was implicated in this particular affair.

Keller frequently went to Dr. Goddard's home in Philadelphia. He met Mrs. Goddard and she, too, developed a liking for him.

Then one day he asked Dr. Goddard to lend him some money. He said he intended starting in business for himself.

"But you have plenty of money to start a business on!" exclaimed the physician.

"That's all gone," answered Keller.

"Gone! Why—why, I can't believe that!"

"You don't have to believe it," snarled the other man and stalked out.

Later the ex-convict visited several of Dr. Goddard's friends and tried to borrow money from them. The doctor summoned Keller and remonstrated with him, telling him to keep away from his friends, that if he had any favors to ask to come to him. Dr. Goddard said that when he really needed help he (Goddard) would see that he got it.

But Keller appeared truculent and when he left the other man's presence there was a wolfish look about his face.

"It would be a cinch to rob the Goddard home," Keller had confided to his wife, "and one of these fine nights I'm going to do it. I've been all over that house and I know it like a book. The doctor usually has some cash around and his wife's jewels would net a nice pile. And don't think I wouldn't bump him off if he got in my way!"

Finally she had gone to Dr. Goddard and warned him, but he was inclined to scoff at the idea. Now he began to suspect there might be something in it. Certainly Eddie had changed.

We approach another climax. . . .

On the night of December 19, 1925, Keller reported as usual at the bank. He was to work from midnight until 6 a. m. (of the 20th) and as usual was required to press a button every half an hour to show that everything was all right.

Keller sent in his 12 o'clock signal. At 12:30, after he had completed the first round, he pressed the button again. He also gave his customary signals at 1, 1:30 and 2 o'clock. But when 2:30 came there was no signal from Watchman Keller.

"Keller hasn't signaled yet," reported a door of which was set wide, but two dogs came toward us, baying, and a man who was sitting by the doorway rose and called them to heel.

I could not see him very well, for the daylight was almost gone, but he was a big, burly fellow and clearly the farmer or master of the place.

When the grand duchess asked for petrol he shook his head.

"I have none," he said slowly. "I have an old car, but that is away for repairs, and all the spirit I have is in her tank. Have you far to go, madam."

"As far as the nearest pump."

"I see. Well, that is at Bariche, on the Richtenburg road."

"How far is Bariche?"

"A matter of fifteen miles."

"We must have petrol," she said. "Can you lend us a horse?"

"Not to travel that distance, madam. My horses have done their day's work."

"It shall be stabled at Bariche and I will deposit its value against its return."

The other shook his head.

"Tomorrow, madam," he said. "But not tonight. Where is your car?"

"This side of the bridge," said my lady. "A mile away."

"I do not see its lamps," said the other.

"Because they are not turned on."

The man appeared to hesitate. Then—

"I will give you shelter," he said, and called for lights.

"I do not want shelter," said my lady. "I want a horse."

A man came clumping with a lantern.

"In any event," said the farmer, "I will go with you to your car."

With that he took the lantern and bade the man turn out a yoke of oxen and bring them down to the bridge.

"It is damp in the meadows," he said.

"Force majeure," she said.

"I will walk to Mariche," said I.

"And lose yourself by the way. No. There is nothing to be done. At dawn perhaps——"

She was right. There was nothing to be done. Bell and Rowley must wait and so mush the duke. The farmer was not a peasant that could be bluffed or bribed. In his way he would help us or not at all.

"Will you wait here?" said I. "If we can do nothing till daybreak we may as well bring in the car."

The girl hesitated. Then——

"Paul will be hasty," she said. "I think I had better come."

"I will handle him," said I. "Your shoes were not meant for these roads. "I stepped to the bench from which the man had risen and felt the stone. "The stone is still warm and will be for half an hour. But we shall be here before then."

"Very well," said the grand duchess. "Don't let Paul play the fool."

The farmer was a man of very few words.

When I asked him the way to Bariche he answered that it lay to the south: when I asked if he could lodge us he nodded his head, and when I observed that his home was very handsome he spoke to one of his dogs.

As we approached the car I took the lead and, cheerfully hailing the others, cried out that we were in luck, for we could have food and lodging of an excellent sort, that petrol would be brought in the morning and that oxen were coming to draw the car to the farm. My ruse, however, was a failure, for the duke began to rave like a madman, demanding to be carried to Vigil, as though we were slaves of some lamp, now swearing that we had betrayed him and now reviling the car, talking all manner of nonsense about his position and birth and declaring that we might be glad to sleep where we could, but that such was not the habit of royalty or, indeed, of any person of high estate.

Hanbury was speaking wearily.

"The reasons for this display are three. The first is he wants a cocktail; the second, he's out of cigarets, and the third, he regrets having chucked his excellent gold cigaret case—merely because it was empty—into the stream."

Once more, remembering my promise, I strove to appease the duke's wrath, although, I confess, I was sorely tempted to cool it by throwing him after his bauble into the stream; but, as was to be expected, I might have saved my breath, for he cut me short by announcing that he was not accustomed to having his commands disobeyed.

"Needs must," said I shortly. "We'll breakfast over the border with any luck."

The duke peered at the farmer, who was now alongside.

"You've got petrol, of course," he blustered. "You can't deceive me. How many cans can I have at a pound apiece?"

The farmer raised his lantern until he could see the duke's face. For a moment he regarded him steadily. Then he lowered the light.

"The misfortune is mine," he said quietly. "I have no petrol. But I have a kitchen and a cellar of which I am not ashamed."

I was greatly relieved, for the duke's tone was high and mighty, and I had not expected an answer one-half so smooth. I, therefore, made haste to suggest that he and George and the farmer should proceed to the house, while I came on with the oxen, soon to arrive. While he was hesitating I gave him a cigaret, and I think that settled the matter, for when he had lit it, he spat out an oath or two and flung out of the car.

The oxen moved very slowly and nearly an hour had gone by before I was led to a handsomely furnished parlor—which once, I should say, had been the abbot's—with arras upon its walls. The car was bestowed in an outhouse, of which I had taken the key, and, since her bonnet was locked, could come to no harm. And I had washed in a horse trough and was ready enough for a meal.

A table had been set in the parlor and decently laid for four, and the chamber was pleasantly lighted by lamps which hung from the roof.

The duke was there dozing, and Hanbury was reading a book.

"We've fallen soft," said George. "This is some cove's private house. The book plates suggest that his name is Martin Egge. I imagine the farmer's his bailiff. I hope he's a right to lodge us, but I'm damned well not going to ask."

Be sure I agreed with him.

A good, plain dinner was served by two young girls, and the duke said the wine would pass, but Hanbury and I drank ale.

The grand duchess was very silent, but thanked me for sending her dressing case up to her room.

When the meal was over our host came into the parlor and stood blinking in the light of the lamp.

"We have to thank you," said my lady. "You are treating us very well."

The other bowed.

"I am bailiff to Baron Veners, madam, whose house this is. He would wish me to entertain strangers who have lost their way.

"And to speed them," said the grand duchess, "by sending a man for petrol at break of day."

"That is understood, madam."

He bowed again and withdrew.

Very soon after the grand duchess took her leave.

As I opened the door she looked me full in the eyes.

"Who's Baron Veners?" she murmured.

The next moment she was gone.

I made my way to the window and stood looking out into the night.

There was much that was strange about the bailiff and unusual about the place. The name of the book plates was not Veners. The house was at our disposal, and food and wine, but not a horse to help us to go our ways. But I was tired and had had my fill of riddles, and I think there comes a time when the evil of the day is sufficient and a man will swallow his fortune without asking whench it came. The grand duchess, however, was not the one to ask an idle question or to set a tired man thinking for nothing at all.

Wearily enough I started to marshal my wits.

As I did so without and below the window somebody coughed.

I leaned out to see the bailiff, sitting as we had found him, on the bench by the door. This was open and his shape was outlined against the blur of light which was shed by a lamp in the hall. His great head was up and he was smoking placidly, with his heavy arms folded and his eyes on the west.

I drew in my head and strove to appraise the man.

He had not been uncivil, yet he had not been polite; he had been firm, but not downright: his air was not that of a soldier, nor that of a rogue, but of something betwixt and between—I could not think what. I did not distrust the fellow, but I had the feeling that, though he had given us shelter, he had done so neither for our sake nor yet for his own. He had seemed, I recalled, to doubt the presence of the car and had plainly decided to go and see for himself. He had called for a lantern, although night had not fallen and only a blind man could ever have missed the way When I would have talked he would not, and, when the duke had crossed him, he passed it by. These things were consistent with his manner—the wilful, deliberate manner of a masterful man whose eyes are upon his duty, whose duty is to take no risks.

Slowly I returned to the room.

As I looked upon the table which bore the remains of our meal, I suddenly wondered whether the food we had eaten had not, in fact, been prepared for somebody else.

Instantly my brain seized upon this idea.

We could not have been expected; yet, if our reception was improvised it had been amazingly done. The baron was not in residence, yet his apartments were open and ready for use; four benighted strangers had been given a four-course dinner with more dispatch than they would have found at an inn—this notwithstanding that, so far as we were concerned, no orders had been issued to the servants until the bailiff was back from viewing the car.

The thing was clear. Company had been expected and we had taken its place.

Before I could digest this conclusion I saw that it was false.

If the bailiff was expecting a party he would hardly have encouraged four strangers to usurp its lodging and board.

I felt suddenly angry with the man. As our host he should have been friendly. Instead, he had the air of a jailer. Yes. That was right. He had the air of a jailer.

The word might have been a wand.

As it came into my mind the scales fell from my eyes.

Who Baron Veners might be I did not know. But I knew where he was. And that was on his back by the side of a country road, with his hands bound fast behind him and Bell and Rowley sitting in the dark by his side.

* * * *

As I had half expected, the bed.chambers we were given were cells the monks had used. They were very small and must have been cold in winter, for the walls and floors were of stone, but they were pleasantly furnished, and each had a little window that looked upon the courtyard.

A woman that was sewing in the passage lighted us into our rooms, and, when she had bid us "Good night" I entered Hanbury's chamber and shut the door.

George heard me out in silence, smoking and swinging his legs.

When I had finished——

"Good for you," he said shortly. "Once you're shown it the thing is as clear as paint. The bailiff was expecting his master—complete with political prisoner, to-wit, the heir-apparent of Reichtenburg. When he saw the grand duchess he guessed that the game had been bungled and smelt a chance of picking the pieces up. But the first thing to do was to see if the duke was there: so he takes a lantern to have a look at his face. The rest's easy. But I don't think he'll send for petrol at break of day."

"I must get it," said I, "but our friend mustn't know that I've gone. So long as he thinks we suspect nothing he'll let us alone. Sans petrol, we're stuck, and he knows it. What's more, he'll swear that some's coming, to keep us glued to the house. If he asks where I am you must say I'm keeping my bed, but, with luck, I'll be back before breakfast with Rowley and Bell."

George took his pipe from his mouth and rubbed his nose.

"Bill," says he, "don't be a fool. This dukeling may have his merits. If he has, they're damned well veiled, but they may be there. But I'll tell you this. Lump them all together and chuck in his rotten life and they're not worth the one night's rest of an honest man."

"I know," said I, smiling. "But I'd like to help the grand duchess. There's nothing the matter with her."

"I suppose this will help her," said George thoughtfully.

I shrugged my shoulders.

Then I gave him the key to the outhouse in which the car stood, and told him there were arms in her locker and advised him to draw a pistol as soon as he decently could.

"And tell the grand duchess I've gone, but not the duke."

"Is that wise?" said George.

"Very wise," said I. "She's a quicker wit than we have and—and better hands?"

"I believe you," said George, "but she's got a whip in her boot."

* * * *

I put out my candle and leaned out into the night.

There was the bailiff, still sitting by the side of the door, in case, I suppose, his master should presently come. Whether his dogs were with him I could not tell.

I had not had much hope of being able to go that way, and, indeed, it seemed idle to have to do with the court, when the back of the house gave upon blowing meadows that ran right up to the weeds. I, therefore, drew in my head and turned to the door.

Now I had learned as a child that in abbeys and such-like foundations there was sometimes a stairway that led direct from the dormitories into the church, and it at once occurred to me that, though the church was gone, the stairway, if built in the mansion, would still be there.

A glance through my keyhole showed that the passage was in darkness, and an instant later I was stealing down it as fast as I dared. My shoes were soled with rubber and made no sound.

Sure enough, at the end of the passage I came to a winding staircase some four feet wide.

I had stopped at its head for a moment to see if I could find a handhold, in case I slipped, when I thought that I heard a movement behind my back.

I was flat against the wall in an instant and holding my breath, but though I stood for two minutes as still as death, the sound was not repeated, and I made up my mind that my fancy had played me a trick.

man at the detective agency. He waited until 2:35—still no signal.

"Better run over to the bank and see if anything's wrong," said the night chief.

Something was wrong. Mr. Edward Keller had quit his job. He had walked out of the bank with $6,061 in cash and about $13,000 in endorsed checks.

He hurried to his furnished room, stuffed the money and checks into a suitcase, and then taxied to a hotel, where he registered under an assumed name. He emerged about 6:30 and hailed a taxicab. He ordered the driver, Frank Geneha, to drive him to Broad and Wallace streets. He drummed nervously on the suitcase.

In the meanwhile the detective agency had learned of Keller's disappearance. They had visited the apartment where he had taken his bride but which he had left months before without informing the bank of his change of address.

The search was on.

When the taxi reached Broad and Wallace streets, Keller alighted, telling the driver to wait. He returned in a few moments, looking very worried. He instructed Gencha to drive him to a Germantown address.

"And hurry!" he said. "Hurry, hurry, hurry!"

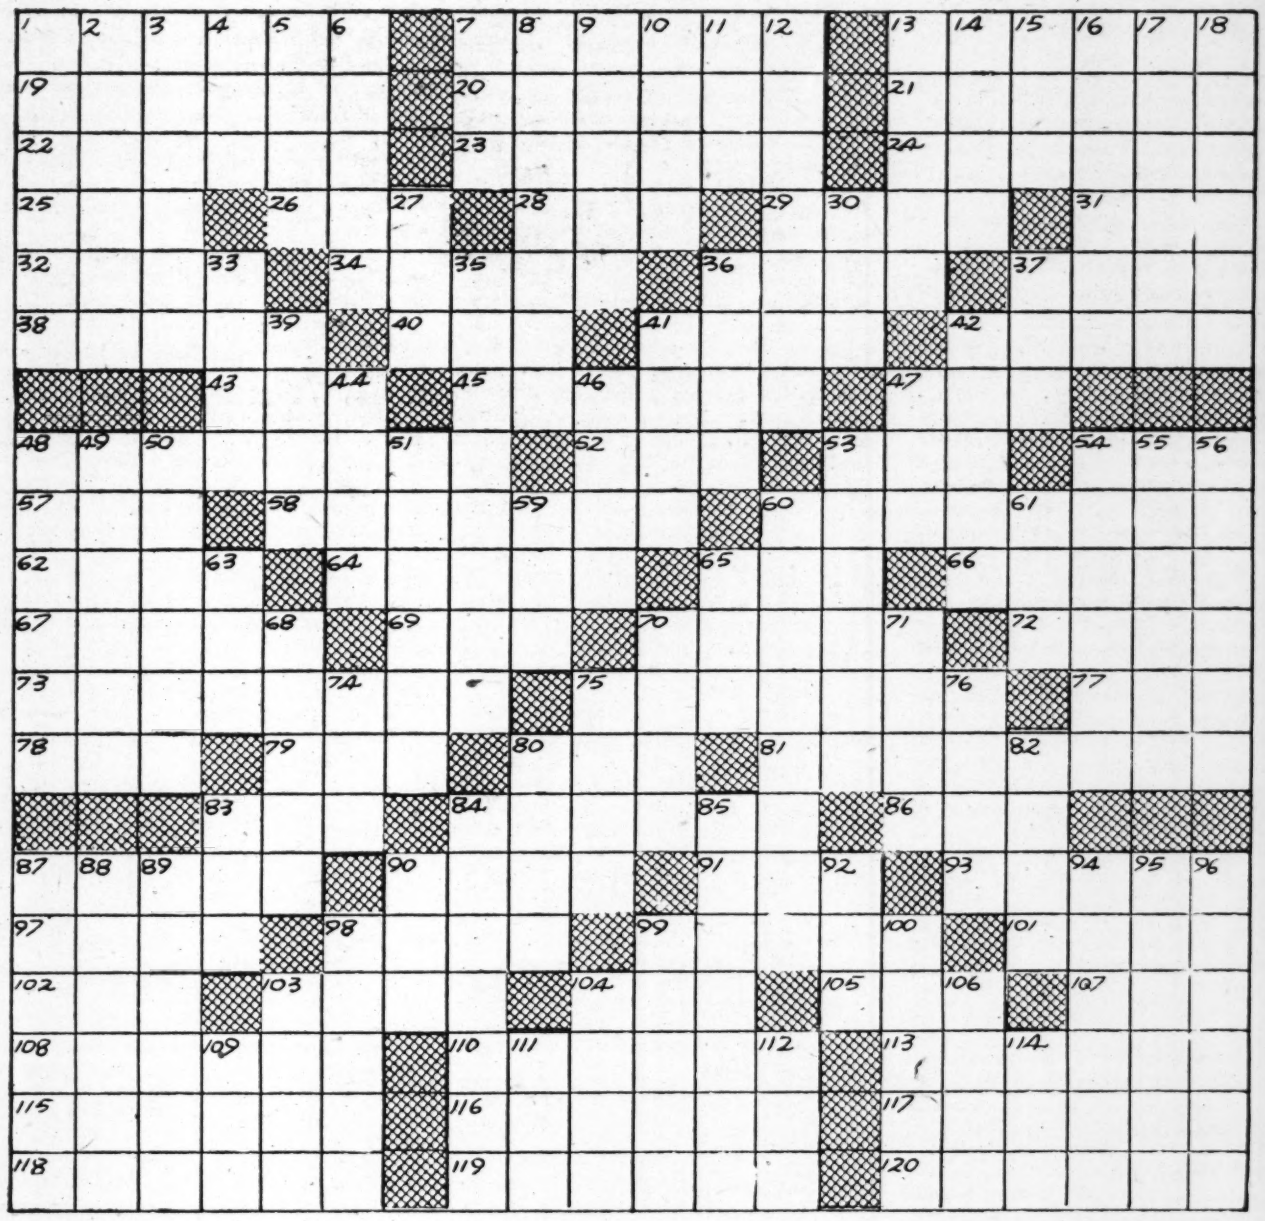

They had reached Germantown and Chelton avenues when Gencha glanced behind him. What he saw made him bring the machine to an abrupt halt.

Edward Keller lay slumped over his bag of money, dead! He had died, doctors said, of heart failure, superinduced by fear.

Solutions of Last Week's Puzzles

Broadway Banter

BY FORNEY WYLY.

THIS reviewer belongs among that group of people who have always found the annual "Grand Street Follies" sparkling and diverting entertainment. Even when last year they left Grand Street behind them and snootily took up their abode at the Booth Theater uptown, I still liked their show. It is therefore a keen disappointment to say that the edition just opened is not only not up to their former standard, but is, for the most part, uncommonly tiresome.

For reasons which escaped me, the present revue decided to start with the Garden of Eden and make fun of everything and everybody that has happened since them. They bring in all the famous characters of history as Lenore Ulric, Gertrude Lawrence, Irene Bordoni and Beatrice Lillie would portray them. And it was all so effortful and strained that it wasn't very funny. There were of course sparkling bits now and then; the burlesque of "Serena Blandish"—especially the work of Albert Carroll as Constance Collier and Paula Trueman as Ruth Gordon—was exceptionally clever. But I did think that young Carroll's impersonation of Beatrice Lillie was singularly inaccurate and unfunny. Dorothy Sands, with the exception of a fairly funny caricature of Lenore Ulric was left with a lot of bad material on her hands; Miss Trueman fared better than the other mimics in that her sketches were more amusing. Her impersonation of prowling Hope Williams in "Holiday" was well-nigh perfect.

The music was to say the least undistinguished. It was not hard to believe that Mr. Schwartz who composed it had also written the score for "The Little Show," which opened the night before and which boasts of fairly tuneful music. He must have been all tired out and run down when he got around to the "Grand Street" score for it was pretty feeble stuff.

* * * *

However, the unquestioned success of another revue named "The Little Show" gives us a substitution for the niche "Grand Street Follies" generally fills in the summer months. Here is a smart, sophisticated revue more like the English "Charlot Revues" and "This Year of Grace" than any previous American efforts have been. The sketches are short and sure-fire; the lyrics by Howard Dietz are among the best I have ever heard. Just when young Dietz found time to run up these lyrics is something which escapes me, for during the daytime he is the guy who sees that the world at large hears about Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer pictures through what is quaintly known as "the press." One of the funniest of the Dietz ideas is a number in which we are shown what the Tiller Girls are like at home; how that through sheer habit they do everything in unison just as they do on the stage.

The cast of "The Little Show" is well-known. The first night audience all but devoured Clifton Webb, so I guess I'm wrong in not caring for him. He occupies a fairly high position in my list of pet Broadway abominations. Fred Allen I was prepared to think was funny but I didn't want to think he was funny all night, and we were given far, far too much of a really clever comedian. Libby Holman sang in her usual sullen and enchanting way and there has been the general complaint that the glamorous Miss Holman was not given enough to do. Romney Brent is—as always—clever, and I liked particularly the way Miss Bettina Hall and Mr. John McCauley were able to put over the Goo-y numbers without being rougish about it.

"The Little Show" is the smart revue to see at present. Those of you who must be in the swing of things must se this one almost immediately. The others of you who want to see a swell revue might do the same thing.

* * * *

There've been more movie people here lately. Clive Brook, his wife and two daughters were here for a day or so before sailing for Europe where Mr. Brook has been allowed a six weeks vacation. Ronald Colman was here with them at the Ambassador and stayed over for the opening of his first talking picture, "Bull Dog Drummond," which is a knock-out. Colman talking is twice as magnetic as he was silent. I had lunch recently with Maurice Chevalier whose first talkie, "Innocents of Paris," has put him over in a big way. I also had the pleasure of lunching with Ernst Lubitsch, (still my idea of the best of the movie directors,) who is all enthusiastic over the first audible picture he is to direct, an operetta with Chevalier as its star. Lubitsch is a small, alert little man with a marvelous sense of humor and who would be at an utter loss without a big cigar hanging out the corner of his mouth.

The lovely Constance Bennett, who has decided to stop being Mrs. Phil Plant and go back to being Connie Bennett of the films, looked ravishing at the opening of "Bull Dog Drummond." Incidentally her sister, Joan Bennett, is the very attractive leading lady opposite Ronald Colman in the picture. Connie Bennett's first talking picture will be "This Thing Called Love."

Another quaint and amusing English play has found its way over her, the new one being "Bird in Hand." There is no doubt in the world that each and every member of that cast came from England. Those accents could never be mistaken nor faked. The play is slight of plot but the clever lines John Drinkwater has written into it make the viewing of it enjoyable. To one who is a bit weary of phony English accents one encounters in one's friends from Kansas and Mississippi, the real thing sounded pretty good. I suggest that you see "Bird in Hand" for something out of the beaten path.

Did you hear about the man who was invited to a very swank dinner party but got so drunk during the later afternoon that he decided he couldn't go? So the next morning he wrote his hostess a note of apology, "I'm sorry I couldn't come last night but frankly I was drunk." "You bet you were," his hostess wrote back. "You were apparently so drunk you don't remember that you did come to the party after all!"

women were concerned. He recalled the fair Canary with no particular distaste. By comparison with Electra, Canary was a dainty feminine morsel.

And so he decided to marry Canary Gaunt. Or, more specifically, he decided to marry Canary Gaunt's diamond pin. He plunged into a whirlwind courtship. He spent money with a lavish hand. He flattered and vacaliered. And he was not at all bothered by the fact that he was doing Frantic Marshall a very dirty trick.

There was the matter of the pin, of course. He had sold his interest to Frantic for fifty dollars and received payment in full. But Frantic had given the pin to Canary as an engagement present. Some men might have shrunk from circumventing that bargain in so crude a manner, but not Mocha.

Canary Gaunt was dazzled. The more she saw of Mocha, the less favorably she regarded Frantic. That little man was running around in circles; utterly bewildered and colossally miserable. Canary was always with Mocha.

And then came the night when, under the cold stare of a winter moon, Mocha proposed marriage. Canary, radiant with happiness, accepted. They forgot the forlorn figure of Frantic Marshall.

Mocha urged haste. "When does us got ma'ied, Honeybunch?"

"Pretty soon."

"When?"

"Nex' month?"

"Oh! shuh. . . . I couldn't wait that long."

"Nex' week?"

"No, ma'am!" Mocha was thinking of Electra. It was a terrible thought. Suppose Electra should recognize the pin at the eleventh hour? Then he'd be obligated to make matrimony with Canary . . . and he wouldn't get the pin. It was up to him to marry her quickly, and speedily convert the pin into a diamond ring . . . for himself.

"Now, listen, Sugarfoots," he murmured persuasively, "all these yeahs I has waited fo' you, an' I cain't wait no longer. I gits suggestive that us marries each other tomorrow afternoon an' no later."

"Oh! Mocha-honey!"

"Says you will?"

"If—if you insisses."

And so it was decided. Mr. Mocha Williams was superlatively happy that night, although somehow he couldn't rid his mind of Electra. There was danger, of course, so long as that diamond remained in its original setting. But by the next night Mocha would be the boss of the family. Easy enough, in the first days of the honeymoon, to get that pin from his bride.

The wedding day dawned clear and cold. Mocha bought a new necktie—distinctly crimson—and was ready for marriage. He was vastly elated—not so much with the prospect of marrying Canary Gaunt—as with himself. He had salvaged much from nothing. He had attained unattainable ends. He regarded himself as considerable of a genius.

Shortly after noon he called for the bride. She met him on the veranda—all enclosed in a new coat. Together they went to the courthouse where the marriage license was obtained. Then they proceeded to the residence of the Rev'end Plato Tubb and Canary became Mrs. Mocha Williams.

Immediately after the ceremony they journeyed to her house where they had decided to spend a honeymoon. Mocha was trembling with eagerness. Canary removed her coat and Mocha blinked.

Something was missing.

"Canary," he inquired. "Where's yo' pin?"

"Which pin?"

"That diamond one you has been wearin' all the time?"

Canary smiled pridefully. "Shuh! Mocha—I knowed you never would let me keep another man's present. So this morning I gave that pin back to Frantic Marshall."

this fear of the parents is natural but useless, and is born from a lack of familiarity with the work of thousands of men who are eager to protect and guide the youth of today."

"Do you have a campfire at your camp?" asked Bob.

"Yes, indeed," answered the director. "That, you know, is the heart of every camp. The lure of the campfire, as it crackles and spurts seems to beckon and call the boys to its warmth. There is a rapture that boys experience as they gaze on an open fire that nothing else affords. Story telling is very popular at all hours in camp, but the story-telling hour around the campfire has never been excelled by any activity.

"You know, Bob, at our camp the boys do most of the story telling as they sit around the campfire and eat roasted marshmallows. Some camps teach the boys campfire ceremonials. They have a Torch Bearer to light the fire and have a Chief, appointed by the boys, to direct their ceremonies and songs. I could spend the night telling incidents that happen around the campfire."

"Surely you are not leaving us, Mr. Conrad," exclaimed Bob's mother.

"Yes, as much as I dislike to go, I know that boys need sleep and stories of camp never aid the Sandman. I shall send you more literature about the camp, for I see that Bob will fit in with the boys who are already enrolled. You know, one of the camp director's jobs is to select boys who will be happy with the type of boys enrolled. This makes for a successful camp—one that returns your boy to you, just a little better than you sent him away."

"If you wish I shall send two of our old campers to see Bob. They will describe a day in camp and since they have been our high point winners, I am sure you will enjoy them."

"Oh, do," cried Bob with joy.

And the parents said: "Our boy is a camper!"

Indigestion is Baby's Greatest Enemy

A scientific study of the anatomy reveals the fact that practically every ailment the body is subject to can be traced directly or indirectly to the intestinal tract. This applies to babies even more than adults, and the most insidious of these ailments is indigestion.

Indigestion is not a disease in itself, but the result of deep-seated trouble. To relieve the pain does not cure indigestion; the cause must be removed.

Mother, if you notice baby having gas, belching or spitting up food, or if baby is fretful, you can promptly and safely correct the cause with Teethina, a famous prescription prepared especially for babies' delicate stomachs.

Teethina gently removes all poisonous waste from the little stomach without irritating it, dispells gas the natural way, reduces fever and cleanses the intestines thoroughly. It may be given with the utmost safety to relieve babies of Colic, Gas, Diarrhea, Constipation and Indigestion.

Physicians and nurses recommend Teethina. All druggists sell it. Price 30c.

Our Weekly Meeting

June is just around the corner. In less than two weeks we will be entering into the month during which summertime makes its appearance. June is one of the happiest months for boys and girls, because it brings not only the sunny days and the happy hours, but also brings the beginning of good old vacation time.

Along about this time of the year we start to figure on where we are going to make our camp, where we are going to dig our bait, and how many fish we want to catch. There is a cozy little nook down on the river bank where the bushes grow thick and the willows make a graceful canopy over your head, and you can throw your line in there most any time and get a good bite right off the reel. Good times, fishin' and swimmin' and playin' baseball, and, oh, boy! No school all summer!

So our contest this time is going to be about "Summertime!" Read the rules on this page, and then get busy. No matter if you have tried and haven't won a prize so far. Don't give up! It's the fellow who can smile when he fails and starts right up and tries again—yes, sir! He's the one who is sure to win some day.

Boys and girls all over are interested in what other boys and girls are doing, and it is interesting to receive postcards from members in far-away places. Some of our members write me that they have a collection of cards and letters from members in thirty to forty different states, as well as from Canada and foreign countries. This pastime has grown to be one of our favorites, and is almost as interesting if not more so than stamp collecting.

We are fortunate this week in having a foreign letter to present to ou club—from a new member in Germany, who writes in as follows:

Dear Seck:
I want to join your club. I have no two-cent stamp in American post, so I am sending you a 10-pfennig German stamp which is worth 2 1-2 cents.
My daddy is going to the University of Erlangen, so I will stay here until August. I am taking German lessons, and my mother gives me third grade work so that I will be in the fourth grade when I am 9 years old.
I saw the Zeppelin. I do wish the rest of the members could have seen it. It was a wonderful sight. I wish some of the members would write to me.
Yours, fair and square,
HAL RUNZLER,
Hindenburg 61, Erlangen, Germany.

Well, Hal, we certainly hope a lot of members will write to you, and I think they will, because they like to send letters to foreign countries. And we surely would like to have you tell us all about that Zeppelin. For your nice letter we will send one of our books across the sea to you in a few days. Auf wiedersehen, Hal.

Next we present a letter from a club member who was born in France:

My Dear Seckatary Hawkins:
I have decided to join your club, and take a real pleasure to write this letter. My name is Jimmie Logan. My home is in Waverly, Ohio, but I was born in Paris, France. My father was a soldier "Over There" during the World War, and there he met my mother.
I am now nine years old and am in the third grade at school. I like to read your stories of adventure in the Sunday paper, and I also enjoy the radio meeting.
The boys in our neighborhood have formed a Seckatary Logan Club. We meet every Tuesday and Friday after school in our shack at my home. We have adopted the same motto that you have for your club. I hope you receive this letter so that you may know how interested we all are in Seckatary Hawkins.
Sincerely yours,
JIMMIE LOGAN,
Waverly, Ohio.

Here's hoping the Seck Logan's Club has lots of luck, Jimmie. And we are glad you adopted the fair-and-square motto, too. You'll get a book for this dandy letter some day this week.

Now let us introduce a new member from Illinois:

Dear Seckatary:
I am sending my membership blank for my club badge. My sister Sadie has a club badge, and I like the pin very much. I read the Seckatary Hawkins page every day, when I have all my chores finished. I also read the letters that you have printed in the paper. I think it is very interesting. When I bring the paper home every night when I come home from school I turn to the funnies and read Seckatary Hawkins. I am in the 8th grade.
Yours, fair and square,
MARGUERITE TILLIE,
Box 197, Mineral Ill.

That's right, Marguerite, always finish your chores before you start to play. It's only fair and square. You have your club button and membership card by now, and you will get a book for your nice letter in a day of two.

We find this one in the basket of Alabama letters:

Dear Seck:
This is the first time I have written to your club, but I have wanted to write for a long time. I think your club is just fine because I have been reading it in the paper. I have gotten so interested in it, I would like to be a member of your club. So I am planning to write a story or poem some day.
Perhaps you would like to know something about me, so I will try to tell you. I am in the 8th grade, and 13 years old. I am sending a two-cent stamp for my club badge. And I am hoping to be enrolled as a member of your club.
Yours, fair and square,
INEZ BARNETT,
Route 6, Opelika, Ala.

We are glad to add your name to our Alabama list, Inez, and we hope you will take part in our contest every week. You will receive a book from us boys some day this week, too. Hope you like it. Tell all your friends that if their letters are printed in "OUR WEEKLY MEETING" column they will win a book, but if their letters appear only in "The Seckatary's Mail Box," that means they are only honorable mention, but should try again, and even again, if necessary, until they get mentioned in our weekly meeting. So long, Inez.

The meeting will now adjourn till next week, when we meet again on this page. Don't put off your contest work—send it in as early as you can. And write me a letter, too, and perhaps it will be read in one of our radio meetings soon—and that reminds me to remind you not to miss our radio meetings Tuesday evenings at 7:00 o'clock from Station WSAI, and next Saturday evening at 5:00 o'clock from Station WLW.

Bye, till next week,

Yours, fair and square,

Seckatary Hawkins

A SUMMERTIME PASSWORD

"Mother's Day" was the solution of last week's password. And I gave you the biggest hint when I said "What day is this?"

Well, summertime is coming again, and there will be a couple of places in the outdoors that will be a second home to most boys. There are some places that a fellow likes better than any in the summertime, and one I have in mind—it's where I happened to pass the other day and I heard some boys talking happily a little distance from me and one said: "Glim this new home! Oh, boy, here's were you'll find me most of the time this summer."

The voice came from a place behind a beautiful setting of green growing things, so high and so thick that I couldn't see where the boys were, but I knew, anyway. Yes, the boy's first four words told me:

GLIM THIS NEW HOME

That's the password, you see. Change these letters around until they are in their right places, and they will spell three words that tell you where the boys were, and you'll understand it perfectly.

A NEW CONTEST EACH WEEK

Dear Seckatary Hawkins:
I finished reading "Seckatary Hawkins in Cuba" yesterday. It belonged to Charlettte. It sure was good but my, it was spooky. I read about a face looking in the window just before I went to bed and it sure did scare me. Hawkins, you are a wonder to figure out all those mysteries.
Aren't we glad school is nearly out? I sure am, whether anyone else is or not. All I dread is final exams.
It sure has been raining hard lately. I thought we were going to have a storm here yesterday.
Yours, fair and square.
ELEANOR LITTLE, 12,
Carnesville, Ga.

Dear Seck:
I have read about your club for a long time, and now I want to join, so please send me my badge pretty soon. Don't you wish you could go around and visit all the ones who have enrolled in your club? I know I would. They all write such interesting letters, too.
I hope to see this letter in print. If it isn't I shall try again, for it doesn't do any good to give up in anything, not even arithmetic problems.
I am going to try to win one of the contests on your page soon.
Your friend,
JEAN OLSTAD, 12,
Chatsworth, Ga.

Dear Seck:
Hello, Seck, old boy! Your club is sure an interesting affair. The thing I'm worried about is whether I can join or not.
Aren't you glad summer is so near? Soon for another glorious vacation. I always want to spend my vacation in the country. I like to sit on the cool banks of some beautiful stream of water and watch the waves cover the banks with snowy spray. I am a real sport, Seck. To be brief, I love quietness and excitement. I could not choose between them.
Say, old fellow, I think your club is the best there is. Loyal and noble are the only words I can think of to describe it.
Seckatary, Jerry and Shadow are the most ideal ones among you. That's my idea. Is Shadow much moody, Seck? And say, is he that fellow with the soft voice.
I hope you boys have lots of good times on the river bank this summer.
BONNIE LEDFORD,
New Holland, Ga.

Dear Seck:
I have been reading your letters for six months now and I am going to start a club of my own. My brother also wants to join your club and receive a badge to wear. We have four members who are going to join and then more later on. We like your motto of "Fair and Square," and are going to try to live up to it. We are going to build a clubhouse later on in which we can hold our meetings. I have been elected seckatary of our club and Clarence Ludke is captain. We are going to pay a small fee each month so we can buy equipment for amusements.
Please tell others to write to me.
Yours, fair and square,
ERWIN E. and GEORGE ENGEL,
Summerdale, Ala.

"CIRCUS DAY"—By CARL FULLER

There is a circus in our town
Which has an elephant and a clown.
If you are happy and ready to play,
Be sure you are at the circus today.

—CARL FULLER, 907 Ford St., LaGrange, Ga.

"CIRCUS DAY"
Circus day will soon be here,
With all the animals and magic queer,
A heap of clowns so wise and funny;
I wouldn't miss it for heaps of money.
I'd spend my last dime
Just to be there every time
And watch the show through,
See everything they do.
Let's play fair and square
So we can all have a share
In the fun that all say
Naturally comes with circus day.
DICKIE CULBREATH, 11,
Palmetto, Ga.

Dear Seck:
I am a member of your club and think it is a good one. I certainly do enjoy reading your letters.
I am 12 years old, five feet two inches high and am in the seventh grade.
My mother has a turkey gobbler which I named Seck after your club.
Yours, fair and square,
PAULINE KING,
Graham, Ala.

Dear Seck:
I have been reading in the daily Constitution about you and your club and sure do like it.
I sure do like your motto, "Fair and Square," because that is the best thing a person can do is to be "fair and square." And I also like your colors, "blue and white."
We have two big fish ponds full of fish of all kind. When you feed them, thousands of little fish will come up to eat the bread. They sure do look pretty.
I gave a birthday party Saturday evening. There were about twenty-one here. We played all kinds of games. I received several presents.
I will now tell you how I look. I have light hair and blue eyes, fair complexion, am about four feet tall, and weigh about eighty-five pounds. Am twelve years old and in the sixth grade at school.
I will close, hoping all the members will write to me. I will answer all letters I receive.
LEOLA DOROUGH,
Route 3, Roopville, Ga.

Dear Seck:
I am already a member of your club and some of my friends and I have organized a club, too. We have seven members, but our club is not near as good as yours because our clubhouse is not on a river bank. Some of our members are only six and seven years old and they want to join your club and live up t oyour motto. Are they too young?
I carry your page to our club and read it to the smaller members and they like it.
I get your page every day and enjoy it very much. Tell Jerry and Shadow and other members to write me and your write, too. I will answer all the letters I receive.
Yours, fair and square.
CLYDE HALLMAN,
Route No. 2, Eatonton, Ga.

Dear Seckatary:
I have just gotten through reading your adventures, and I enjoy them just fine. I am sending a two-cent stamp for my club badge, and I hope when I get by badge I will win one of your books. I like your colors and motto fine. Well, I will describe myself. I am four feet and eight inches tall, weigh 82 pounds. I have brown hair, grey eyes and fair complexion, and I will try to live up to all the rules and be fair and square. I am eleven years old and in the seventh grade.
Yours, fair and square,
ZELMA HOWINGTON,
Commeree, Ga.

Dear Seckatary:
I read your letters every day and Sunday, too, and enjoy them very much. I am very much interested in your club and I try to obey the rules. I hope the Pelhams behave themselves and let you all alone. I stand for your side, Seckatary, and always will. I am in the sixth grade. I am twelve years old. My birthday is February 3, have I a twin? Tell the members of your club to write me. I would like to hear from them.
Yours, fair and square.
MONTINE McMILLIAN,
R. F. D. No. 1, Dacula, Ga.

Dear Seck:
I have been enjoying your stories of your adventures on the river bank. I would like to become a member of your club. I am going to tell you about our clubhouse. My two friends and I are making a log cabin by a stream. We are going to call it Seckatary Hawkins Club. We have planted shrubbery around the cabin. We are going to make a flower garden on one side and a vegetable garden on the other side. We are going to print a "fair and square" sign and pin it on the door. One of my friends is a member and the other is going to join.
I am twelve years old and in the sixth grade at school.
Yours, fair and square.
HENRIETTA WOODY,
R. F. D. No. 3, Dublin, Ga.

Dear Seck:
I received my membership card and pin, and I am sure very proud of them. I am very interested in your club and read about it in the daily and Sunday papers, also my daddy got me four Seckatary Hawkins magazines from the Seckatary Hawkins store here. Gee, Seck, but it's fun to belong to your club. I feel as if I know all of you boys as well as all the other boys and girls who have written to the page. Doesn't it feel as if I have a world more new friends since I joined your club. I wish I could come to the meetings, but as I can't I keep up with all the movements of the club in the paper. Well, Seck, I have talked entirely too long, so I must close. Tell the boys hello for me.
Yours, fair and square,
MARIE RICE, 13,
956 Virginia Ave., N. E., Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Hawkins:
It is summer and I would like to be with you and your club. I would help you whip those mean Pelhams on the other side of the river. I am sorry for the Skinny Guy. I am in the fourth grade in school and am twelve years old.
I will close for this time.
Yours, fair and square.

HIGH LIGHTS OF HISTORY

Chapter CXXXII: Sea Commerce in 13th and 14th Centuries.

By J. CARROLL MANSFIELD

THE LATTER PART OF THE MIDDLE AGES WITNESSED A GREAT INCREASE IN THE COMMERCE OF WESTERN EUROPE, DUE TO THE DEMAND FOR THE SILKS, SPICES, CARPETS, PERFUMES, PORCELAINS AND JEWELS OF THE ORIENT. —•

BEFORE THE CRUSADES THE ITALIAN CITIES OF VENICE AND GENOA HAD BEGUN TRADING WITH THE CARAVANS THAT BROUGHT THE PRODUCTS OF INDIA, PERSIA AND CHINA TO THE EASTERN SHORE OF THE MEDITERRANEAN. —•

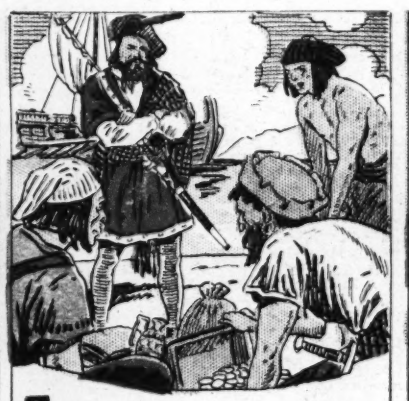

IN GERMANY GREAT TRADING PORTS GREW UP WHICH BECAME DISTRIBUTING POINTS FOR THE GOODS OF EASTERN LANDS THAT WAS CARRIED OVERLAND FROM CONSTANTINOPLE BY WAY OF VIENNA.

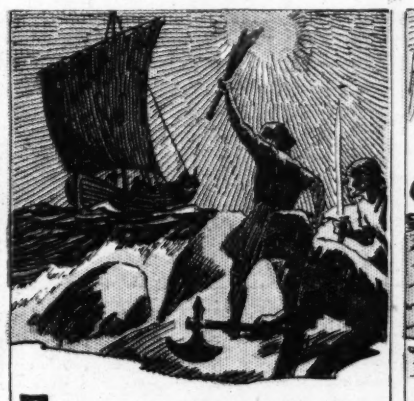

COMMERCE BY SEA WAS EXTREMELY HAZARDOUS IN THOSE DAYS. SHIPS WERE SMALL AND HARD TO MANAGE IN STORMS. THE SKIPPERS AVOIDED THE OPEN SEA AND HUGGED THE SHORE.

THE NORTH SEA, THE BALTIC AND THE MEDITERRANEAN WERE INFESTED WITH FIERCE PIRATES WHO LAY IN WAIT TO ATTACK AND PLUNDER MERCHANT VESSELS. —•

AFTER A SUCCESSFUL ATTACK THE PIRATES WOULD RETIRE TO THEIR "DEN" ON SHORE TO DIVIDE THE SPOILS. CAPTIVES WERE HELD FOR RANSOM. —•

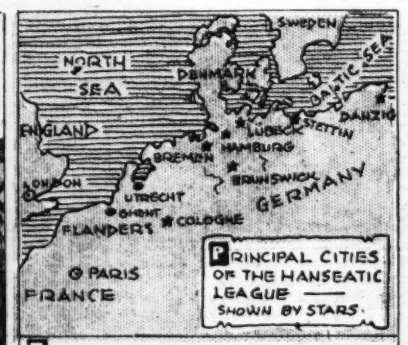

ONE TRICK OF THE PIRATES WAS TO SHOW FALSE LIGHTS ON THE SHORE TO LURE VESSELS TO DESTRUCTION ON ROCKY REEFS.

AFTER THE SHIP HAD STRUCK, THE PIRATES WOULD GO ABOARD, KILL THE SURVIVORS OF THE CREW, AND ROB THE WRECK OF ITS CARGO.

SO SEVERE WERE THE RAVAGES OF THE PIRATES THAT GROUPS OF LARGE TRADING CITIES BANDED TOGETHER TO PROTECT THEIR SHIPPING.

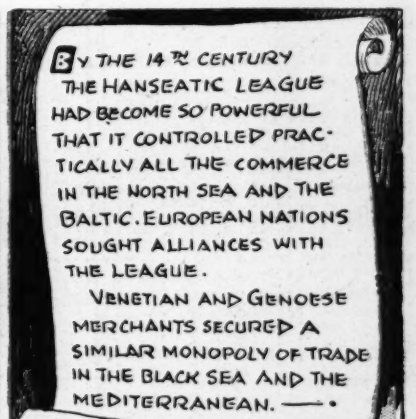

THE MOST FAMOUS OF THESE CONFEDERATIONS WAS THE "HANSEATIC LEAGUE", FOUNDED IN 1241. THIS UNION WAS COMPOSED OF SEVENTY GERMAN CITIES, CHIEF AMONG THEM LÜBECK, HAMBURG AND BREMEN. THE "LEAGUE" ALSO OPERATED TRADING STATIONS IN ENGLAND, NORWAY AND RUSSIA.

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate

IT SENT OUT ITS MERCHANTMEN IN LARGE FLEETS, ESCORTED BY WARSHIPS, AND DISPATCHED BODIES OF TROOPS TO DESTROY PIRATE STRONGHOLDS ALONG THE SHORE.

BY THE 14TH CENTURY THE HANSEATIC LEAGUE HAD BECOME SO POWERFUL THAT IT CONTROLLED PRACTICALLY ALL THE COMMERCE IN THE NORTH SEA AND THE BALTIC. EUROPEAN NATIONS SOUGHT ALLIANCES WITH THE LEAGUE.

VENETIAN AND GENOESE MERCHANTS SECURED A SIMILAR MONOPOLY OF TRADE IN THE BLACK SEA AND THE MEDITERRANEAN. —•

Jeckerson was waiting for me. And it happened that I was the first boy down to the clubhouse after school that day. I had taken the key from my pocket to unlock the door, and was swinging it between my thumb and forefinger as I turned from the river path to the little line of stone flags that leads to our clubhouse. And then I saw him. Jeckerson, the famous detective from Watertown. And didn't I know what he wanted! Indeed, I did. It made my heart sink an inch or two when I saw him.

"Hello," he said, in a low tone. "Is 'at you, Hawkins?"

I didn't answer him; I know it wasn't very polite, but I couldn't help it. His presence today irked me; I knew what he wanted, and I wasn't ready for Jeckerson yet. I brushed past him up the steps and unlocked the door. He was on his feet instantly, however, and followed me into my writing room. I flung my cap upon a hook and faced him across my desk.

"Well," I said, "do I look changed to you, that you have to ask me is it me when I come up the path?"

"Well, you do look a bit worried around the eyes, I'd say," said Jeckerson with a grin, as he chewed his long black cigar and blew smoke through his nose. "Look here, kid, you've never double-crossed me yet. I won't believe you're going to do it now. See?"

I jerked my hand away from him.

"You know I wouldn't," I said, with a frown; "I'll stick to you, Jeckerson, fair and square—only I am not ready yet—"

"Not ready yet, not ready yet!" snapped Jeckerson. "That's all I ever get from you, boy! Well, I'm game. I'll stand for a lot of gaff from you Hawkins, boy. You've helped me out lots of times, and I'm not one to forget. But I'm here to tell you you're all wrong with that not-ready-yet stuff. First thing you know, our birds will be flown, and we'll all kick ourselves in the pants for being so gosh-almighty stupid."

"All right, Jeckerson," I said, dropping my head in my hands, "I guess I'm beaten. What do you want me to do?"

"Ah, no, Hawkins," he said gently, "don't take it that way—you're never beaten till you admit it—you're not going to quit on me before the job's done, are you?"

That straightened me up.

"No!" I said. "I'm no quitter. You know me well enough, Jeckerson. I've just been trying to save a poor little kid—a friend of mine—Little Gil, we call him. He's a member of our club—"

"I've heard the name," broke in Jeckerson, with a nod. "I could have caught him, too, if it hadn't been for you. Always you tell me 'Give me time, let me do it my own way.' Well, time's about up, kid. I don't like to rush you, Hawkins, because you've done me some good turns. But unless we act quickly now, this case is going to get away from us, and I'll have to mark up the first failure I've had since I became the famous Jeckerson of Watertown. Naturally, I don't want that to happen."

I looked up at him with some scorn.

"You hate yourself, don't you?" I asked, softly. "Never mind, don't apologize. Even if you do admit it yourself, Jeckerson, you are a great detective. But it isn't your brains that make me think so much of you. No, sir. It's because many times you've shown that you've got a heart inside you. That's what makes me like you. Your heart, sir."

Jeckerson coughed out a lot of tobacco smoke as he waved his hand and said:

"Don't try to play that sympathy racket, kid. I'm too old in this game. No, sir! No heart in me at all—a detective who wants to be famous can't afford to have a heart, y'understand, kid? Don't ever repeat that to anybody else, will you? I want that kid! That's all. Give me the kid, and I'll have the key. The guilty man will come forward, once I put my hands tight upon that boy—"

"I know what you want," I said, wearily, as I turned my face away from him. "And I'm ready to tell you the truth, Jeckerson. I am fair and square with you. Judge Granbery looks upon me as the chief of his junior police. I know that doesn't mean much to you—that junior police stuff—but it has duty mixed up in it, somewhere. Some small kind of duty, anyway. And as long as Judge Granbery chooses to call me the chief of his junior police, I'll do my duty, even though it breaks my heart."

"You always make good speeches, Hawkins," said Jeckerson with a grin and a jerk of his head; "but, seriously, now! Judge Granbery does expect you to help me solve this new mystery on your river bank—in fact, the very first thing he told me, after I answered his summons, was 'Go see Hawkins, the kid they call Seckatary, and he will help you!'"

"I'll help you," I said, nodding; "and, believe me, Jeckerson, I'm the only one who can. I know what you want. You're looking for a man who is called King of the Hoboes. All right. I know him, I'll tell you his name. They call him Old Daddy Joe. The tramps do, I mean. They got that nickname from hearing Little Gil call him Daddy Joe. But what you could possibly want him for, I can't imagine, for he's one of the finest

"Don't go way from this old river bank now, Daddy Joe, let me stay and be with Hawkins and the club," urged Little Gil.

old tramps I've ever met, Jeckerson—"

"Diamonds!" said Jeckerson, sharply, nodding at me. "The big white stones that do nothing but sparkle and cost a fortune—and plenty of 'em on this string—that's what we want the King of the Hoboes for. He's got those diamonds, Hawkins, as sure as you're sitting there—"

"What do I know about diamonds!" I shouted at him. "Ask me what do I know? I couldn't tell one from a piece of glass. I never saw one except that one in my mother's solitary ring, and I never give it a good look, 'cause diamonds don't seem to be much fun to me. I don't know a thing about diamonds. But ask me what I know about people! Ask me what I know about Little Gil and Daddy Joe. Ask me that, and I'll tell you there aren't any finer people God ever made than those two, even if they are in rags and have to beg for a living. They've got no manners, no fine airs—no! But they've got hearts, like you and I have, and they're fair and square. Diamonds! You'll not find any on Old Daddy Joe. Call him King of the Hoboes, if you want. Maybe it is something to laugh at—I don't know. But you can't make any of us boys believe he is a thief! That's all there is to it, Jeckerson, and you'll never make me change my mind about that."

"Hm!" he hummed, as if he were sorry he had hurt my feelings. "I didn't mean to be gruff about it, Hawkins. It's only my job to do this, you know. I've got to run down this clue—we know who stole the Larrimore necklace. That's the part that makes it just too bad, you see. We know that the King of the Hoboes stole 'em. He was so braggy about it that he wrote his name with his forefinger on the dust of the wall paper—wrote 'King of the Hoboes,' and it's there yet, for evidence if needed. And even if it wasn't for that, we'd know it was the King of the Hoboes who did the job, because he used a kid to climb through the transom and open the door. Then he slipped inside and got the pretty beads. Thirty-nine diamonds on a single string. Worth a man's whole lifetime of work and worry. And we have enough evidence to prove that they were taken by the King of the Hoboes. Wrote his name, boasting about it, y'un'erstand, Hawkins, wrote on the dust of the wallpaper with his finger, 'King of the Hoboes.' Always proud to put it over on the public when he took something. You see, it's convincing evidence. Think that over for a few minutes, Seckatary boy."

I looked up quickly.

"I'll need no few minutes!" I snapped at him. "My mind's made up on that, Jeckerson—Old Daddy Joe didn't steal those diamonds—Little Gil had nothing to do with it—"

Jeckerson got up and threw up his hands.

"No use to argue with you," he said. And turning upon me suddenly, he rasped out: "Are you goin' to help me solve this puzzle, Hawkins?"

"Of course, you know I am, Jeckerson," I said, and I stood up and held out my hand to him. He took it and pressed my fingers in his big mitt. "But you can't expect me to—well, Jeckerson, even if Daddy Joe did do it, I can't let Little Gil know—you see, Jeckerson, I like that little kid—it'll break his heart if he finds out that anything his Old Daddy Joe did was wrong—"

"Go on, go on!" interrupted Jeckerson, in a low tone. He turned away to hide his face from me. Jeckerson, too, was soft-hearted in a way. "I don't want you to rummy the little kid's life, Hawkins. I've waited this long for you, guess I can wait a little longer. You got the right idea, all right. I could 'a' nabbed Old Daddy Joe. But I waited on you, Seck. You wanted to see that this little kid had a fair and square chance—"

"That's it, Jeckerson!" I broke in. "Supposin' you were Old Daddy Joe, and I was Little Gil. Would you want me to know you did anything wrong, like you said about those diamonds—"

"Don't say any more!" cut in Jeckerson, holding up his hand. "I un-erstand, Seckatary, old chap! Only one thing more, before I go. Keep your eye on 'em. I've got a sneakin' notion they will all fold up their tents like the Arabs and silently sneak away. If Daddy Joe tries to get away—well, I'm trusting you to see that he doesn't. That's all. Goodbye, kid."

Jeckerson had gone just in time. The boys came in to hold the regular meeting, not more than five minutes after the Watertown detective had departed. And as we all took our places around the long pine table in the meeting room, I noticed that two chairs were vacant—those belonging to our newest members, Little Gil and Lord Harry. I suppose no other paid attention to the chair upon which Perry Stokes, the overseer of our clubhouse, had painted the name "Lord Harry," but they all took a squint at the chair on which was the name of "Little Gil"—the little beggar! They all liked him. Not so sure about Lord Harry. If it hadn't been for Little Gil, I doubt if Lord Harry would have had a chair marked for him. He was considered the "high hat" member—his uncle, Sir Eustace, the Englishman who lived in the red and green mansion and for whom Little Gil's Old Daddy Joe was lodgekeeper, was the highest-toned man that our town had ever known. And our captain, Dick Ferris, did not call the meeting to order at once.

"We will wait five minutes for Little Gil," he said. He didn't mention anything about Lord Harry. As if who cared! We waited five minutes; and then we waited ten more. A quarter of an hour we chatted away across the long pine board, and still the little rascal did not show up.

"Has any one seen Little Gil today?" asked our captain.

Nobody had seen him. But Roy Dobel had seen somebody whom we might like to hear about, he said.

"Old Jacobi," said Roy, nodding, as he got clumsily to his feet, and gazed rather abashed at the faces that stared up into his. "The mean old tramp himself, I saw. I came down here at noon today, and there he was! I saw him! Right outside there, on the porch o' this clubhouse. He tried the door, but when he found it locked, he moved off, muttering to himself. And I didn't like his muttering, fellows. Like as not he is made enough to carry out his threat to burn down this clubhouse because we would not give Little Gil up to him, after that time when we took Little Gil out of Old Jacobi's hole in the dug-out, on Burney's Field—"

That was appalling news to us. We had thought Jacobi had gone. We had thought him far away from this clubhouse by now. Long since he had threatened to burn our clubhouse down. Spring had come with all its glor yand its perfume, and we had thought that all of the sadness of the winter had been wiped out with the new joy of the season. In fact, so much had passed since last we had heard of Old Jacobi that we had forgotten all about him, and thought we had no more to fear of him.

"There will be no meeting today, then," said our captain, as he banged the table with his wooden hammer. "Bill Darby, you take the fellows out into the hollow for baseball practice. And Hawkins, you and Shadow Loomis go out scouting around to find out what you can, first of all, about Little Gil, why he didn't come today, and, second of all, find out if you can get on the trail of Old Jacobi to see where that old miser'ble tramp holds out."

"And about Lord Harry?" I asked, softly.

Dick didn't answer. Instead, he brought his wooden hammer down upon the table with a louder whack than before.

"Follow orders!" he said.

And so it happened that Shadow and I were trailing along the woodland path, with Perry Stokes at our heels, his rusty rifle in his hands. Although our captain had not mentioned Perry as going along, Perry considered himself, nevertheless, my personal bodyguard, and, furthermore, figured that, since he had been with me in all my private worries with the hobo kid—Little Gil—since that little beggar had thrust himself into our midst, it was no more than right that he should accompany me now on this mission of doubt.

It was wide-open springtime in these woods. And whither were we going? Not one of us knew. Only when we stood in front of the lodgekeeper's cottage at the gate of Sir Eustace's grounds did we seem to know that somehow, some way Providence had guided our footsteps.

We halted at the door of the cottage. Voices inside halted us.

"You shan't go!" came one strong, manly voice. It was the voice of Happer Nam. The young tramp whom we had thought so good-looking that first night, when he had come to our clubhouse, looking for "Old Man Sunshine and Little Boy Blue Bird—"

"We jest got to go!" came Old Daddy Joe's voice. "We're all packed up, Happer. You don't know what you're sayin', you don't. Now, I'm older'n you, Happer—listen to me—we got to go now—we got to make our getaway. Now! Tomorrow will be too late—they'll find out all about us—"

"Let Daddy Joe have his way," came a shrill, young voice. And there is were I reached the window and peeped in. Little Gil was standing on his tiptoes in front of Happer Nam; pounding with his fists upon Happer Nam's chest. Old Daddy Joe, a couple of big bundles on either side, stood with his hat upon his head, as though ready to go.

"But you can't go!" persisted Happer Nam, holding his arms out to Old Daddy Joe, while Little Gil bore him down. "If you do, don't you see, it will look as if you were afraid of something—"

"I AM afraid of something, Happer," broke in Old Daddy Joe. "Afraid they'll take him—away from me!"

He jerked his thumb toward Little Gil. But Happer Nam seemed to grow furious, now.

"No!" he cried. And again and again he cried, "No! no! No, Joe, you old good-for-nothing; God love you! I won't see you throwin' yourself away like this—you've got to stop and face the music—you won't lose Little Gil—I promise you that—I'll take care o' him, eh what, youngster? But tonight, Daddy Joe, you've got to face the Council of the Hoboes—"

"Sure, Daddy Joe," urged Little Gil. "Don't go way from this old river bank now, Daddy Joe, let me stay and be with Hawkins and the club a little while—"

"Sonny," broke in Daddy Joe. And then he shoved his hat back upon his head and stooped down in front of the boy. "Listen, Gil, you be a good boy to yer old pappy, an' I want to be good to you, too. But you don't want 'em to take you erway from me, do ya? Jest think o' all the good times we had together, sonny. You know how I like ya—if they'd take yer 'way from me now, I jest couldn't go on livin' no more—"

"They'll never take you away from me, Daddy Joe!" cried Little Gil, looking up into old Joe's eyes, and then he reached up and put his arms about the grizzled old fellow, and began to cry.

"Hushy-bye, sonny," said old Joe, soothingly. "There, now, don't ye cry no more. I'm not goin' to let 'em snatch you up and run erway wit' you—that's why I'm all packed up and ready to go. We will sneak away—"

"No, you won't," I said, as I stepped into the doorway. The three of them turned startled faces toward me. "No, Daddy Joe, you're wrong about that goin' away business. You're goin' to stay right here on this old river bank—"

"The Seckatary boy!" exclaimed Old Joe, staring at me. For a few moments none of us spoke. But I knew that those three tramps were thinking, and I knew they were afraid.

"Unpack your things, Joe," I said, softly, as I went up and stood between him and Little Gil. "I've done a lot for you fellows that you knew nothing about. I've kept you together and I promised you we boys in the club would never let anybody take Little Gil away from you. You've got to play fair and square with me, now, Joe. I've promised somebody that you wouldn't run away. You've got to help me keep my promise. Fair and square."

I turned away and walked to the door, where Shadow and [redacted] waited. I heard some whispering going on behind me between Little Gil and his old Daddy Joe. Then quick footsteps, and as I reached the door, Old Joe's hand fell upon my shoulder, and turned me around.

"Seckatary boy," he said, slowly, and in a low voice, "I cain't play no tricks on you—I jest cain't do it—an' even though they get my boy, I'll help you keep thet promise, so 'elp me!"

"Good old Joe!" I said, as I shook his hand. "You're true blue, you are. And don't worry—we boys will stick to you to the finish."

Which we did.

Silly things. . . . .

Several summers ago, we reached the conclusion that no matter how you played the ponies you were bound to wind up behind the eight ball in the end. For a long time we entertained the notion that we could pick 'em as well as the next guy. In so far as that went, we were right. The only fallacy was that the next guy couldn't pick 'em either.

So, after going into hock, we determined to leave the horses to folks who were blessed with healthier pocketbooks. Accordingly, we left the ponies for a long, long time.

A few days ago, just before the Zeigfeld roof closed for the season, we sat at a table with Paul Whiteman, L. Wolfe Gilbert, the song writer, and several other gentlemen of various occupations. The conversation turned to horses.

The opinions of Mr. Whiteman, Mr. Gilbert and the column were absolutely unanimous. You couldn't beat the gee-gees. As we drifted into another line of conversation, one of the other men at the table pulled us to one side.

"Don't you ever play them any more, Mark?" he asked.

"Nope," we responded. "Why?"

"Well," he murmured, "I just got a couple of tips from an owner. They look good. One runs tomorrow, the other the next day. But, of course, since you're not playing any more——"

We yanked out a pencil.

"Let's have the names," we cried. "Can't do any harm."

So he gave us the names. The first horse, running the next afternoon, was Sun Clover. He was to be played for first and third, since they weren't absolutely certain they could win with him. The other horse, for the following day, was Every Time. Every Time, it seemed, was a cinch. He was to be played to win.

The next day we arrived at the office shortly before 5 o'clock. Running through our notes, we found the names of the two horses. We called in to Walter Ryan, youthful horse expert, who can tell you the name of a pony's grandfather by the way its left ear twitches.

"Walter," we inquired, "how did Sun Clover finish?"

"He won," was the prompt response. "Paid four and a half to one."

This tipster had had the right dope. He had given us another horse for the following day. Every Time was the name—and he was a cinch to win. Hadn't the tipster said so himself?

When Every Time, the horse that was sure to win, went to the post the following afternoon we had a sizeable bet on him. So did half the office. The word seemed to have been spread around, although we don't see why. We didn't tell more than forty or fifty people.

You know what happened. It always happens. Every Time didn't win that race. Our horse wasn't even close. There was enough space between Every Time and the leaders to stage a new Mexican revolution.

We've stopped playing the ponies again.

You might credit Helen Walsh, the second sweetest show girl in the business, with this swell story of a couple of small time vaudevillians. In vaudeville, as you probably know, most of the wives go up to the booking offices to arrange "next week." This is done for the simple reason that a woman has more of a chance of getting an audience with a booker.

This struggling couple, then, were playing with another man and woman combination. After the first performance, the male member of the first act hastened into his street trousers and rushed back to the wings to see the other act.

"Downstairs, downstairs," growled the stage manager. "This is Monday and we don't want nobody standin' in our way."

"Aw, I ain't botherin' nobody," said the actor, "I jus' wanna get a peek at this act."

The stage manager glared at the ham.

"Listen, bum," he muttered, "I told you to get downstairs."

The actor did not choose to run.

"I can't see," he argued, "how I'm interfering with——"

The fists of the stage manager swung once. And then again. And the actor fell in a heap.

After the stage manager had gone, the whipped actor picked himself up and went weeping to his dressing room.

"Now what?" beefed his wife. "Who hit you?"

"Boo-hoo," wept the sap. "It was that big roughneck of a stage manager."

"And didn't you hit him back?" she asked.

"Why should I hit him?" was the amazing response. "Don't you do the business for the act?" . . .

According to Paul Levine, the boy and the girl had been married about five years. He was working very hard, for he wanted to get somewhere in life. When he first stayed away from home for a night or two each week, it was because he really had much work to do.

As the years went by, however, the work became nothing more than an excuse. He loved his wife—but he found more excitement in variety. Most men are like him.

Thus he cheated. He fell into the habit—and once he fell, he went the route. He was away from home at least three nights a week now "at the office."

In the mornings that he was home, he looked at his wife and felt sorry for her. She was a good soul and loved him devotedly. She suspected nothing. He was a rat to be acting as he was. Ah, well—

One evening when he was about to leave his place of business, he was overcome with remorse. Worry tapped at his heart in the remorse code. What was he doing? He had a nice hom and a wonderful wife. Where could he find the same things again in life?

Suddenly he made up his mind. He had told his wife he would be working that night. Now he would surprise her by going home. She would be so happy! He would take her in his arms and tell her that he loved her. To hell with his date with that cheap woman! He was through cheating.

He had a nice home and a wonderful wife. was a large crowd. An ambulance came clanging up. Curiously, the husband rushed to the door.

He saw the body of his wife. She had leaped to her death from the window of their apartment to the rear courtyard. Weeping and wailing, they led him to his apartment that was now so empty and lonesome and cold.

On the table he found a note from his wife. It was a very short note. And it was addressed to him.

"Dearest," it said, "I cannot go on. I am not worthy of you." . . .

Some six years ago—it was on March 16, 1923, to be exact—we went to the Hotel Pennsylvania in order to act as a judge in a little contest. They were trying to find another word for "scofflaw" and we were to be one of three judges.

The word we finally chose was "banbug"—a word that was supposed to describe a character who wanted to ban everything possible. We met a few people, shook hands all around, and departed.

Last week, after all this time, we learned the truth of the story about that little contest.

Before the war, an advertising concern in New York was known as Scott & Scott. The partnership consisted of William and Rose Scott, man and wife, and they both were advertising experts extraordinary. They finally sold their business and retired to Saugatuck, Conn., to live.

Scott was a very ill man with a disease of the liver. Quite frequently it was necessary to draw the fluid from his body, and this was no simple task. Due to his run-down condition, is was impossible to administer ether, and the operations were performed by tying him back to back with a nurse and kidding him until he was in a mood for the operation.

A day arrived, however, when things did not pan out well. Scott was failing rapidly during an operation, and it was necessary to arouse him quickly in order to save his life. The doctor hastened to kid Scott in a personal way. He grew insultingly personal. In order to stir him, the surgeon cast a slur upon Scott's reputation as a salesman.

The doctor intimated that Scott was losing his pep and would never again be the advertising salesman he once was. Scott flared up and said that his brain was just as active as ever.

"I'll prove it to you," shouted Scott angrily. "I'll bet you $00 that I can have the name of a person or article on the lips of people in every state in the union within two months."

The surgeon laughingly accepted the wager.

Scott went to work to win his bet. He chose the name of his wife—Rose Scott—as the person to be advertised. Then he looked around for the best advertising method to take.

At that time, "scofflaw" was a very popular word. Due to the public's feelings concerning interferers with the people's rights, the word was used over and over again. Scott looked at the word and decided to ask for an antonym.

In the name of his wife, he offered $100 for the word which would best describe the direct opposite of a scofflaw. His experience as an advertiser gave him a wide knowledge of the proper steps to take. He enlisted the aid of the various news syndicates and the news traveled to every corner of the country.

Scott won his bet. Contributions came from every state in the union. And on March 16, six years ago, a committee consisting of Jack T. Francis, Mrs. Marion K. Putname and Mrs. Grace Miller White, author of "Tess of the Storm Country," came to this city from Saugatuck in order to have the press select the winning word.

"Banbug," we felt, was the best. And on the following day, Mrs. Scott's name again made its appearance in practically every paper in the country. Her husband had done his job well.

A short while later, the doctor visited Scott to pay his debt.

"You win, Bill," said the surgeon. "Here's your money. Your brain is as active as ever."

Scott smiled weakly.

"I told you that," he said slowly. "I told you my brain was all right—even though my body isn't."

He died a few days later.

WHO KILLED COCK ROBIN?

HIS CREDIT

NOW MIN-MIN! WHAT ON EARTH HAS HAPPENED?

OH — I WAS JUST THINKING OF THAT POOR TRAMP THAT CAME TO OUR BACK DOOR THIS MORNING — HE WAS SO HUNGRY — AND TIRED LOOKING — AND SO UNKEMPT —

WELL - WHAT OF IT? WE CAN'T HELP THAT —

THINK! — HE WAS ONCE A LITTLE INNOCENT BABY — WITH PINK CHEEKS — A BABY STARE - BIG BLUE EYES - DIMPLES — THE PRIDE OF SOME MOTHER'S HEART —

THERE - THERE —

AT ONE TIME HE PROBABLY WAS A MODEL CHILD — LIKE OUR CHESTER OR GOLIATH — SOMETHING CREPT INTO HIS LIFE THAT CHANGED HIS CAREER — SOME LITTLE TURN OR CROOK IN THE ROAD — IF A GUIDING HAND HAD HIM THEN TO STEER HIM OVER THE PITFALLS ALL WOULD HAVE BEEN DIFFERENT —

BAD COMPANY PROBABLY STARTED HIM ON THE DOWNWARD PATH — ONE BAD BOY — AND IF HE HAD BEEN CHECKED IN TIME - INSTEAD OF A TRAMP HE WOULD HAVE BEEN A PRIDE TO HIS PARENTS — PARENTS SHOULD GIVE MORE OF THEIR TIME TO THEIR CHILDREN — WE'RE TOO SELFISH —

ONE BAD APPLE WILL SPOIL THE WHOLE BARREL — WHO KNOWS WHERE CHESTER IS NOW? OR WHO THESE COMPANIONS ARE THAT HE PICKS UP IN THE STREET AND PLAYS WITH? OR WHAT THEY'RE UP TO — OR WHAT THEY'LL BE WHEN THEY GROW UP —

CALM YOURSELF MIN. — NOTHING HAS HAPPENED YET —

HE MIGHT BE PLAYING THIS MINUTE WITH THE WORST CRIMINAL IN THE WORLD — A CUT THROAT — BANK ROBBER — FORGER — PICKPOCKET — IT MIGHT BE THE START OF A BAND OF THIEVES - ROBBERS - GUNMEN — OH, ANDY — THINK — OUR LITTLE CHESTER - OUR GOLIATH — ALL I HAVE IS YOU TO ADVISE ME —

THAT BOY THAT HE HAD IN THE HOUSE THIS VERY MORNING MIGHT TURN OUT TO BE A MURDERER! THINK OF IT! THE GALLOWS! ANDY!

MIN YOU'RE RIGHT!

I'LL GO OUT AND GET THAT KID NOW

CHESTER!

COME IN THIS HOUSE AT ONCE!

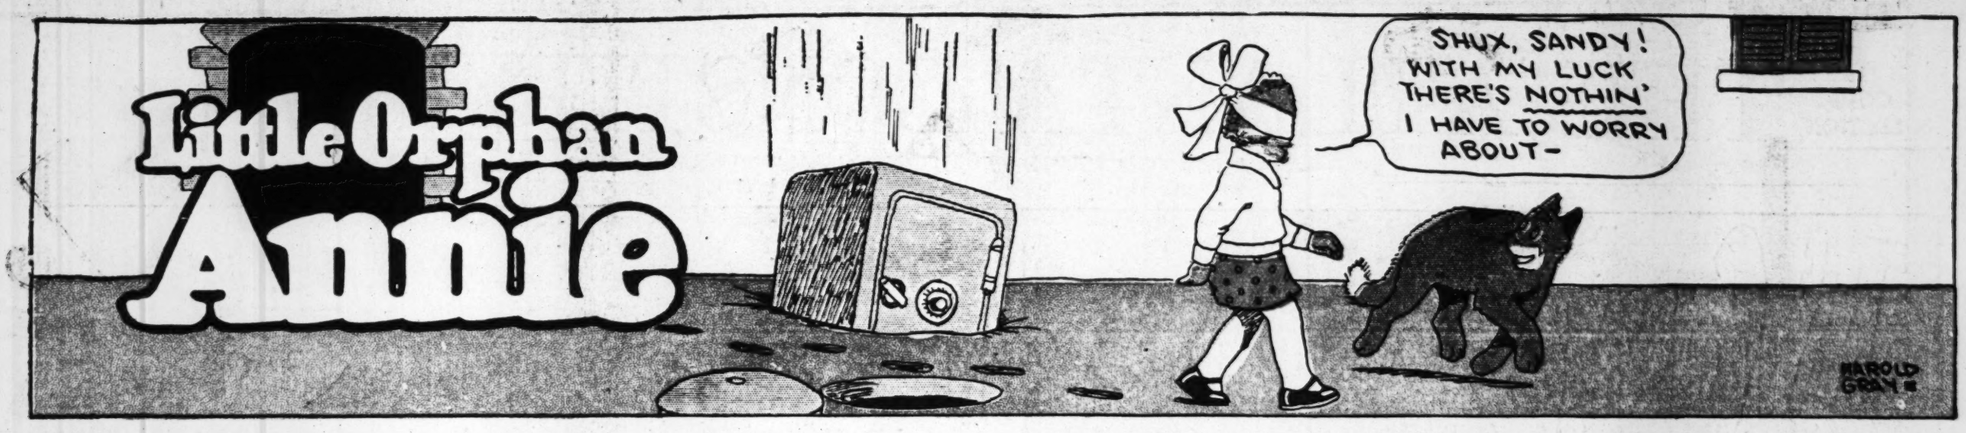

RUN ALONG — HURRY! GET IN THERE!

LISTEN! YOUNG MAN — IF I EVER CATCH YOU AGAIN PLAYING WITH ANY OF THOSE PICKPOCKETS - SAFE CRACKERS AND GUNMEN THAT ARE HANGING AROUND THIS NEIGHBORHOOD — I'LL GIVE YOU A TANNING YOU'LL NEVER FORGET — AND YOU PUT THAT POP GUN AWAY TOO — DON'T EVER LET ME CATCH YOU PLAYING WITH THAT!
